CLUBS: Clubs and organizations were stronger than ever despite the fact that students were already in school for a longer amount of time. The Knights felt better as they joined clubs pertaining to their interests.

SPORTS: Many students chose to lengthen their school day even more by participating in school athletics. This section recognizes athletic teams who dedicated much time and effort to better themselves...physically.

BUSINESS: Part of high school life is learning to budget one's money. The longer school day did not affect student spending, and this section features a few of the businesses who support the improved, the best, the proud...the 1540 better Knights.

You're just a real cool friend you made A.P. just a whole lot of fun. Dave Schaff was just a real jerk. We'll have to get together for some Jim Dandy duck guts this summer. Call me up sometime when you want to play one-on-one in wiffle ball. It was hard to concentrate on history with your enticing and brutally masculine shoulders at my finger tips just quivering with a passionate heat that burns within our masculine-yet tender hearts. I realize you are a person - but it is hard to not notice you as a sex object. But don't think I say this to all of the guys - so far I've only told you and Keith.

MANY STUDENTS AND TEACHERS AGREED that the longer day had many advantages. For example, an extra five minutes added to each period left more time for tests and to finish up last minute details.
 Physics teacher John Kastl makes the most of every minute during his lecture.

Grant! I am, incredibly glad I got to meet you this year. You really made AP & psych. a lot more interesting. I still expect a trip to the Bahamas! (maybe the Caribbean?) I know you said I could call you this summer but I'm SHY so I'll leave you my # and then if you want to talk to me or whatever, you can call... Love, Kathryn

NOT ONLY WAS the day longer, but the study hall rules became strict and strongly enforced. These students decided to get the most out of study hall by actually studying as long as they had to be there.

The Days Were Longer...

It was the year that:

- class periods went from 50 to 55 minutes, thereby extending the school day from 3:15 to 3:35 p.m.
- students had to sign up for five classes minimum, not the three or four seniors could often get by with in the past
- we returned to study halls with attendance taken and students seated in the cafeteria
- seniors got out only two school days earlier, not the four days they used to get
- we had no more early release days due to heat, thanks to a new superintendent who believed going to school is like going to a regular job.

It was the year of longer days. away before you noticed. I but 237 other people wrote this in there, but you're gorgeous. Absolutely gorgeous.

CHEERLEADERS WEAR their summer uniforms at the beginning and the end of the school year in order to be comfortable in the hot weather. Varsity cheerleaders rally the football team to a victory in the season opener against Omaha Bryan.

THE HAWAIIAN DANCE, sponsored by the Drill Team is annually the first dance of the year. Because of the intense heat, fans were placed around the north gym to cool down dancers at rest. Senior Nina Neubert takes advantage of an uncrowded fan.

IN ORDER TO BE better photographers students take PhotoVision to improve their skills. Photography teacher, Gerry Christensen, explains an assignment.

Grant, we've done quite a few things together! good & bad - but overall things turned out pretty good! I'm sorry for the times I have been a bitch & said things I shouldn't have - but we still are pretty good friends maybe. Someday over the summer we can get together & go party! we'll have a good time. Summer & give me a call - 421-3719

Take care Longer Days/3 always Love ya See you soon

But The Knights Were Better

But it was also the year that:

- more students than ever held down part time jobs to save for future plans
- the gymnastics pit was filled with foam for safety so gymnasts could try any new event without getting hurt
- the first group senior picture was taken
- over 10 new faculty members with fresh ideas added new life to the faculty
- boys could join Pep Club
- new mandatory seatbelt law for added safety, saved injuries as well as lives for students in accidents
- Massive amounts of relief aid was sent to Africa's starving people
- John Prash activities center was ready for use on the first day of school
- Senior debator Jim Hanna won fourth place in a National contest for humorous speaking

It was the year of better Knights.

ONE FIRE DRILL each month is a requirement. Most students enjoy fire drills as a short recess to break up the monotony of the longer day.

HALFTIME ENTERTAINMENT is always provided by the home team. During the first home game against Omaha Bryan, the band and the Shirettes work together for perfection.

DESPITE THE RAIN, the football team beat East High and devoted fans battled the elements in order to watch. Seniors Steve Zabel and Jamie Green huddle with junior Steve Cervený and sophomores Nikki Osten and Lisa Bell to keep warm.

SENIOR DEB EASTMAN takes the lead in the Millard South Invitational. The Southeast cross country team won this and most of their meets.

GO! BANANAS! B-A-N-A-N-A-S! was the cheer chanted. Senior team captain Dennis Kahn blindly eats as fast as he can during a banana eating contest against the other two team captains. The contest turned out to be a joke on Kahn when the other two captains ran to join the crowd cheering him on.

Knight Life

Longer days make student life better

It was 3:35 when the last bell of the day rang. It was a long day. Most students had put in over five hours of classtime.

But the day wasn't over yet. At 3:35 p.m. the Knights came to life.

Taking their still abundant energy, the students channeled it into competitive sports, part-time jobs, clubs, activities, and friendships. They participated in the events taking place around them. Their days, as well as their nights, were full of life.

There were 18 teams competing for Southeast. The object of each sport may have been different. Each coach had his/her own standards and goals for their teams. But every player, no matter which sport, did his/her best to make their teams successful.

"Tennis is a part of my school life that I really enjoy. Sometimes it gets hard because people don't understand that you have so much going on. I still like to play because you get to meet people from other schools and travel. School is more than just classes, it's participation and being with people you enjoy," said senior Laura Arth.

Besides sports, students held jobs to earn entertainment funds, to gain experience, and to save money for college.

"Sometimes it's hard getting homework done when you have a job, especially when you have three hours of homework and you work a five hour shift. But it's worth it. The money helps me support my sea monkey colony," senior Erik Anderson said.

Club activities also took care of after school time by bringing students together who had common interests. Interests ranged from French to skiing to debate. There was no limit as to how many clubs one could join. There were enough clubs and activities to keep many involved.

"I like cheerleading. Sometimes it bothers me that we don't get credit for all of the time and work we put into the sports. However, I don't regret my decision to tryout for both reserve and varsity. We've had a lot of memorable times to look back on. It was a lot of fun," said senior Joli Cervený.

What made all these activities enjoyable were the friends students made. "I couldn't live without my friends. Friends help you with your problems and you help them. When you need them they're there. They are very special to me," senior Charley Freidman said.

Students' night life consisted of Knights, joined in their quest for memorable times. Those are the times they will remember long after the last school bell has rung. The 3:35 bell marked the beginning of Knight life.

LUNCHTIME has always been fast paced. With five minutes less this year, seniors Mandy Macrae and Sue Barfield rush back to beat the bell.

MUCH TIME EACH SUMMER is spent preparing for the upcoming school year. A perennial favorite is lining up to get a locker

SOME STUDENTS HELD many different jobs this year. Teaching swimming lessons was one of them. Junior Gail Nelson was a swimming teacher at Woods Pool

WHILE MOST STUDENTS were sound asleep at 6:30 a.m., the Shirettes were out practicing for the first games of the season.

SUMMER SCHOOL WAS a good way to get a few credits out of the way. Seniors Chris Smith and Craig Sosin attend summer school at East High.

Education during July

Far from Southeast students learn

School and hard work was not forgotten for all students on the last day of school. Summer school, clinics, camps, and contests were a part of many summer calendars.

While some students chose to attend summer school at East High to get requirements out of the way, others went because of low grades during the regular school year.

"It gave me a reason to get up and fix my Cheerios," was junior Carrie Richardson's reason for going. Mike Dahm, also a junior, said he went to school to break the tedium of summer life.

Various clinics and camps were held for cheerleading, drill team, student council, sports, drum majors, journalism, and photography. Some clinics, like cheerleading and drill team, for instance, were mandatory while others like journalism were not required.

Working was also part of the everyday schedule for some students. Senior Doug Thompson chose to work at Wyuka Cemetary for his summer job. He worked 8-5 Mondays through Fridays and also on weekends doing maintenance work. "I liked it because I like working with lots of dead people around. It was nice and quiet," he said.

DURING THE SUMMER, many students have extra time for their jobs. Senior Kris Petch earns some extra spending money working in the drive-thru at Runza Drive Inn.

National contests and meetings were a part of summer for a few students. Seniors Rob McEntarffer and Jim Hanna went to the National Speech and Debate Tournament in Eau Claire, Wisconsin. Hanna placed fourth in the nation for his humorous interpretation, and said the thing he will remember most was making it to the final seven and competing before a large audience.

"I had a blast!" was the way senior Bob Holbert described his week at the National Association for Student Councils in Pittsburg. Many ideas, speakers, and inspirational films were enjoyed by both Holbert, the Nebraska State Student Council President, and Selina Shultz, the State's Council secretary, who was also chosen to go.

Whether a student went across town to East High or across the country to Wisconsin, many new things were learned. Students came back to school with new ideas and knowledge gained from their summer educational experiences.

Students welcome stress free days

As the month of June came around, the word summer was on most students minds. Fun, sun, and travel was the major goal.

The hectic schedule would be ended for another year, and students were ready for the relaxation and the pure enjoyment summer holds.

Along with summer came the usual activities such as sleeping late, watching T.V. (especially the soap operas that were missed during the school year), working, or just having fun.

"I slept as late as as I could, then sat around the house all day and watched T.V., and usually went out at night," said senior Danielle Mohr when describing a typical summer day.

Students could be found in many places on hot summer days though these kinds of days were seldom experienced because of the mostly cool weather last summer. Swimming pools and trips to the lake were popular places to meet people and get the perfect tan. When avoiding the heat, or beating rainy day blues, many people could be found in shopping malls and movie theaters.

BRAZIL OFFERS many beautiful sights to people who travel there. Senior Ilse Wendorff spent two months there as a part of the AFS program.

WATER SPORTS are common in Nebraska on hot summer days. Senior Bill Griffin enjoys a nice day for windsurfing at Holmes lake.

On the other hand, some students had the opportunity to travel abroad through Lincoln Public School trips, family vacations, and various types of exchange programs.

Junior Ed Palleson vacationed in Europe with his family. Among the countries visited, they stopped in Russia for one week. "I found the USSR most interesting of the places we visited," he said.

Ilse Wendorff, a senior, also had an opportunity to travel to a foreign country and experience their culture. Through the cultural exchange program American Field Service (AFS), Wendorff spent about three months living with a family in Brazil. After going through a long process involving filling out of forms and interviews, she was chosen to be an ambassador in Brazil though France was the country she originally requested. "It was hard at first because I didn't know the language (Portuguese)," she said. "I had a sister who spoke English, but it was still scary and confusing at first."

As summer progressed, students grew restless with the monotonous vacation days. A longing grew for the routine and stability that school days provided. As the school year continued though, the longing for lazy summer days developed once again.

Individual looks prevail

Students dress match personalities

In past years it seemed that fashion followed a certain set of rules. There were certain periods where everyone wore the same type of clothes. But this year especially, tradition seemed to change. Students were wearing many different styles, and the biggest trend of all seemed to be individualism and originality.

The individualist look seemed to be the goal of most students, especially those who dressed in "New Wave" and "Goodwill look" clothing. These looks included vintage clothing from the 1950's and '60's, wild patterns, and anything that seemed out of the ordinary.

Ideas for a certain style of dressing came from varied sources. Magazines, retail stores, music groups, and past fashions all influenced styles.

Senior Todd Schroer said he got ideas for dressing from the characters in the "Archies" comic strip. "If it (clothing) looks like something they would wear, then I buy it," he said.

Some people chose to wear the newest fashion looks instead of vintage styles.

POPULAR PAISLEY PRINTS provided a prominent new trend in this year's fashion, as senior Barb Burke shows.

Patterns such as plaid, stripes, floral, and paisley prints could be seen on everything from shirts to skirts and jeans.

"I like to be original when I pick my clothes. I like them to be a little different but still be trendy," said sophomore Jill Haskell who likes to wear the current fashions.

Classic, more dressier styles, sometimes known as the Preppy look, was yet another popular fashion.

To top off these individual looks, accessories and the right hair styles were a necessity. Older antique looking costume jewelry was seen everywhere. Scott Wright prefers this style to the more trendier ones. "I dress in the classic style because trends don't last long," he stated.

Hairstyles were important to perfect that certain image. Some popular styles were the one length hair cut called a bob for girls, and a style called a flop where one section of hair is left longer than the rest of the hair. This style was popular for both girls and guys alike.

Whatever the style worn, expressing yourself was a major goal. "I like to stand out and make a statement with the clothes I wear," said sophomore Paul Gossin.

Changing relationships

Teens value lovers, parents, friends

BOY/GIRL RELATIONSHIPS are very common and important among teenagers. Senior Robert Hesse and junior Kim Johnson have been going out for over a year.

The word relationship has many different meanings and these meanings constantly change throughout one's life. A teenager's total existence depended upon his/her parents. They supplied food, shelter, transportation, money, and entertainment. Now, however, a teen's life involves many different people to fulfill needs—needs which cannot be satisfied by parents alone.

Teenagers develop a need for affection and esteem which is usually satisfied by a peer, commonly known as a friend. "I admire the way Kris can find something positive about anything," said senior Susie Carlson about her best friend, senior Kris Jones. These two have been seen together roaming the halls of both Irving and Southeast since eighth grade when they became close friends.

Sometimes the start of a friendship can be an awkward but memorable experience as was the case for Carlson and Jones. The first time they met was in seventh grade at Irving around Christmas time. Jones was giving her Christmas cards out to the class and neglected to give one to Carlson. Carlson's feelings were hurt and she expressed this to Jones. Jones has since made it up to her by being a close and supportive friend at all times. Both agreed that an ideal friendship must consist of honesty, the reassurance of knowing that the other is always there, and trust.

SOUTHEAST IS FILLED with many long lasting friendships. Seniors Susie Carlson and Kris Jones have been friends since seventh grade.

FAMILY VACATIONS are a popular way of getting the whole family together. Here, junior Ed Palfesen, with his mother and brother, are touring Red Square in Moscow.

"If everybody had a friend like the one I have in Susie, I sincerely think that the world would be a better and happier place to live in."

Some people were able to find friends within their own family. Such was the case for junior twins Sam and Steve Clarence. The Clarences agreed that they are "...alike in all ways. We share the same friends and the same classes, but we have different girl-friends." Though the Clarences are alike in many ways, they find that the qualities they look for in a relationship of the opposite sex vary greatly.

The importance of a relationship between members of the opposite sex became evident during the high-school years. "You need a relationship with the opposite sex because you need someone you can be honest with and also enjoy spending time with," said junior Kim Johnson about her relationship with senior Robert Hesse which in October had lasted for one year.

THE STATE FAIR is a popular place to meet people. Senior Pat Hansen makes a new friend at the fair.

EVEN THE SEEMINGLY MENIAL TASK of purchasing fruit can be livened in the company of a friend. Seniors Pat McGinn and Kevin Rokke choose the Hinky Dinky produce section for their lunch.

PLAYING BOARD GAMES gives families a chance to be together and relax. Sophomore Grant Weland and his family play a friendly game of Trivial Pursuit.

Changing relationships

Student affection needs changing

KEEPING A STEADY RELATIONSHIP with his car is important to Weston Quick. Here he cleans a bird off of his bumper

When spending time together, couples enjoy taking walks, going out for dinner, and to the movies. When asked for a memorable moment with Johnson, Hesse replied "...every minute I'm alone with her is memorable to me."

Seniors Bob Holbert and Nina Neubert have found that their long-term relationship thrived upon honesty and open-mindedness with each other, along with having good times.

Meeting a member of the opposite sex can prove to be both a rewarding yet difficult experience. A coincidental meeting took place for Hesse and Johnson. "One day I was downtown and I got a flat tire," Hesse said. "I was going to call for a ride and I ran into Kim and a friend. They gave me a ride home and from that moment on I knew she was the girl of my dreams. She's absolutely incredible."

In a relationship involving a member of the opposite sex, not only personality but looks are considered important. Holbert feels that what is important in a relationship is "to be able to talk about anything" or everything else will go

"Kaput." "She's a goddess. Her eyes, her hair, her cute knees, her long slender feet, I wouldn't change anything about her. If she was perfect, she wouldn't want anything to do with me." Most people admire enough qualities in the other person that they choose not to change anything about them.

Some people still found that one of their parents can be their closest friend and also a frequent companion. Such is the case for senior Robin Neal and her mother Marsha Smith. "We've always been really close because we mutually respect and understand each other," Smith said concerning her relationship with Neal. Neal thinks that their relationship is strong because "...my mom thinks on my level, and she makes me feel like an equal. She doesn't overpower me."

Many students were envious of either their friends relationships with their parents, or of their boy/girl friends. No matter how they felt about their friends, relationships were necessary in everyone's life, though the emphasis placed on them varied from person to person. As stated by Holbert, "Everyone needs a relationship, be it animal, mineral, or vegetable."

-Michelle Dyer and Perky Perry

FOREIGN EXCHANGE STUDENTS create new friendships overseas. Senior Kris Petsch says goodbye to Christine Davidson who stayed with a Southeast student's family over the summer.

MCDONALD'S IS a popular hangout to meet with friends. A group of juniors gather to make their plans for the evening.

CLOSE FRIENDS can often be found around town doing things together. Seniors Kathy Dewey and Ilse Wendorff eat dinner at Valentinos.

IT'S ALWAYS FUN to get a big group of friends together. Senior Laurie Remmers's backyard was the scene of many summer volleyball games with her friends.

ESCAPING THE PRESSURES of the classroom by listening to music is junior Amy Johnson. Although most teachers don't condone such behavior, many students made use of their headphones.

MANY STUDENTS traveled to Omaha to see the R.E.M. concert. Mary Lawlor, Ben Green, and Greg Wiley display their tickets to the November concert.

A FEW STUDENTS who had their own instruments started their own bands. Seniors Matt Briggs and Andy Staley play drums and guitar respectively in their bands.

A NEW IDEA in stereo equipment is the compact disk player. Though more expensive than other equipment, the improved sound quality was well worth the cost.

Styles, choices differ widely

Music popular escape:

Music occupied a part of a person's everyday life. Whether it be while driving to school, watching TV, singing Happy Birthday to a friend in the halls, or at halftime of a football game, music became a basic part of a day.

Though music was common in almost all teenagers' lives, personal tastes in music varied from classical to jazz to more modern music like new wave or hard rock.

Senior Rob Walker said he enjoyed most types of music, among them older rock and roll, classical, and jazz. "Music gives me satisfaction," Walker said. "What music I play depends on what mood I'm in. I put on what will satisfy me at the time."

While some students preferred just to listen to music for personal enjoyment, others chose to take their musical interest further by participating in musical activities.

Classes such as band, orchestra, Court Choir, Ars Nova Cora, and Knight Sounds were offered for students interested in instrumental or vocal music.

DIRT CHEAP AND PICKLES are popular for people who wanted to buy records. Chris Kessler and Corey Knop shop at Dirt Cheap for their favorite records.

"The reason I like being in singing groups is because it's fun being part of a family of friends that have the same interest as I do," said junior Cindi Pasco who participated in both Queen's Court and Court Choir. "It's also an opportunity to really get to know people."

Bands were also a way for people who had common tastes in music to get together and perform.

"I don't care about making money. It's just fun to play at places," said senior Stuart Larson who has been a part of many bands, one of which was called Island of the Misfit Toys. Larson along with four other band members composed and practiced original music.

"There are a lot of places you can go where you can see two or three really good local bands for a couple bucks. There is a big musical movement going on in Lincoln, and a lot of good music is being played," said senior Matt Briggs.

Whatever type of music preferred, music was a way to express feelings and to communicate with others.

"Music is emotional and interesting because you can see how the composer feels," said sophomore Chris Ellenwood. "It's a form of universal communication."

Larson felt music was important because "it's a way you can express your views and opinions."

TAKING A SHORT breather from practice, the cast sits and relaxes during another late night rehearsal

VISUAL PROPS are a needed plus for most productions. Cast members senior Evelyn Becker and sophomore Tonya Rod work hard putting them together

PUTTING THE SHOW all together at a dress rehearsal are senior Rob McEntarffer and junior Jennifer Walker.

Crime and craziness: Themes opposite in one act plays

One of the many cultural events that took place at Southeast during the past year was the annual presentation of the fall play. The plays took place on Nov. 7th and 8th.

"At the beginning of 'Juvie' the characters' crimes have just happened, so they were still in shock. Then each character had a re-enactment of their own crimes, which was really trying," said senior Martha Lauber.

This year, unlike the past years, two one-act plays were chosen as opposed to one longer play. The two plays, "Juvie" and "Roomers" both by Jerome McDonough were chosen because of the sharp contrast between the two themes, and the fact that they were by the same author.

NOT ONLY DO the actors need to know their cues but also the lightmen. So then they'll be ready for "Lights, cameras, action!"

Director Carol Svoboda said that "it gives the students a chance to look at the style of theatre known as repertory. "Juvie" is a very important work on juvenile crime, so the cast will have a chance to do a very serious piece and then a farce such as "Roomers".

The play "Juvie" is designed to give the side of the troubled individual, stated cast member senior James Baylor. "'Juvie' is the nickname given to a juvenile detention center, and this story is the happenings of one night there. They are in there for shoplifting, drinking and for all other sorts of crime," said cast member senior Kyle Dyas.

"Neither of the plays have a real main character," said Dyas, "and that's the way that it is in practice, no one acts superior. Everyone accepts each others character, and how they present it." Both plays are "ensemble" plays, which means that the people in the cast all have relatively equal parts. "One character might have more lines, but all parts are still equal," said Baylor.

All of the hard work and frustrations of the many weeks of hard practice was pulled together and used in an all-out performance by the cast of "Juvie" and "Roomers" on opening night.

WITH A THEME like "On the Edge of a Dream", students could feel the reality of homecoming night.

THE HOMECOMING DANCE was enlightened by the band Jagg playing such songs by groups ranging from the Beatles and U2 to various top 40 music.

THE PERFECT OUTFIT set the mood for many students. Looking for an outfit to dazzle her date, junior Janis Moore shops at Ben Simon's.

Homecoming festivities

The dream comes alive for Knights

"ON THE EDGE OF A DREAM" was how Susie Myers and Scott Gamet felt when crowned Homecoming queen and king.

"I was really shocked and I really didn't think I'd get such a honor," said queen Susie Myers.

Candidates were chosen from all senior letter winners and pep club members. Students then voted to narrow down the list to 10 finalists and then voted again for who they wanted for king and queen. The royalty was then announced at the dance at 11:30.

"At first I was in shock, then after I realized it was really happening, I was ecstatic and it was unreal," said king Scott Gamet.

The festivities started Nov. 1 with an early morning pep rally.

"I think the pep rally got everyone enthused about homecoming and the game," said Shirette Tiffany Seever.

The evening began for most people with the football game against Fremont. The Knights were edged by the Tigers 20-17 in the last game of the regular season.

SHOWING TRUE SCHOOL SPIRIT, some football players shaved their heads. This brave player shaved the initials S.E. on the back of his head.

AS THE ROYALTY enter, the crowd stands watching. Seniors Tom Gifford and Susie Carlson walk down the aisle before the king and queen are announced.

Having homecoming so late in the season, was a first for the school. "The dance had to be after a game on a school day, and all the other weekends before Nov. 1 were full," Pep Club president Amy Castro explained.

After the game, most people then traveled to the north gym for the dance which started at 9 p.m. and lasted until midnight.

Balloons, clouds, hearts, and metallic streamers were used to enhance the theme "On the Edge of a Dream." The pep club sponsored the dance, and were responsible for all the preparations, decorations, and entertainment.

The music was provided by the band Jagg which played mostly modern music.

"I think all the pizzazz and effort that is put into homecoming makes it a big event," said senior Stephanie Buckwalter. "It's fun to be there, and most people have a great time."

SENIOR HAP POCRAS displays his tremendous athletic ability by jumping past Mike Cotter and dunking the ball in an intramural game

THE OPENING TIP-OFF of a basketball game can be very important in terms of early momentum. All the players from these two intramural teams concentrate on the outcome of this tip-off

EXPERT INTRAMURAL TEAMS were sometimes forced to play with footballs due to what one team member called a "national basketball shortage."

Sports just for fun of it

Intramurals is time for fun, friends

Some students found that going home everyday after school can be a tedious and over-done activity. Even though there were many other fun and exciting things to do in Lincoln, Nebraska, such as cruising through Holmes Lake to check out the action (and members of the opposite sex), some students found other means to make their lifestyle more eventful. Their afternoons revolved around a unique combination of being with friends, having fun, and allowing their bodies to experience a physical activity which is known around the school as participating in an intramural sport.

There is an intramural sport to fulfill almost any person's dream of the perfectly most exciting activity to do after school. These sports included the following: baseball, bowling, and basketball. But this year a new concept was added to make the intramural seasons more able to serve a wider variety of interests. This sport is none other than the widely acclaimed activity of weightlifting.

The people that were participating in intramurals were able to choose their own teams, team titles, and practice whenever it was convenient for them.

"Intramurals enable my friends and me to get together once or twice a week and have a good time doing something that we all enjoy," said senior Jenny Horne.

The team with the best overall season record was awarded by receiving a trophy and recognition from the school. Senior Bob Blumenstock said: "I do intramurals because it gives me a chance to do sports that I wouldn't have been able to do on a varsity level. It's nice to be able to get school recognition for doing good and having fun, especially getting gym credits for doing it."

Besides enjoying the sports, the participants in intramurals were also able to earn 1 to 2.5 credit points, depending on the sport.

"It's a great way to have fun plus get the bonus of getting a few credit points for something that I like to do," said Horne.

Junior Katie Dimon summed up her feelings on intramurals: "I really enjoy getting the exercise, and being in a different atmosphere with my friends. I also enjoy having fun without the pressure of a big deal if you lose -or by some far chance, you win!" -Perky Perry

Poll Results

Intro

The Shield staff conducted an unscientific poll involving 200 seniors, juniors, and sophomores with questions concerning the "typical Lincoln teenager." Using the results from these polls and our experience as adolescents, we came up with our portrait of a "typical teenager". The "typical teenager", of course, cannot be found. Each student is an individual, and to put everyone in categories is unfair. But this is just for fun. So read on to find out how much of a teenager you really are.

"A black and gold cover."

Please notice the colors on the cover of this book.

"You need more color pictures in the yearbook."

Here is one picture for you to color. The rest of the pictures in this book are now available for coloring. We recommend using "Bic" felt tip jumbo markers.

"I know you need the money, but I'd rather pay five dollars more for a book with a small ad section."

We have provided you with this very small ad section.

When you first pick up a magazine, what is the first thing you do... Look at the pictures, right? If a group of photos look interesting, then maybe you will read the article; maybe not.

O.K. Now let's just pretend that you opened up this month's National Geographic Magazine. As you look through it, you see one picture of a group of natives huddled together embarrassed to get their picture taken. On the next page there is a beautiful picture of a rain forest, but it is interrupted by a huge hand in the center of focus. The next page shows an old English fisherman on his little tugboat looking very humble, but in looking closer at his right hand, a very long middle finger is extended towards the camera.

Thank goodness this is only pretend for National Geographic photographers, but as Shield photographers, we must face this very unprofessional atmosphere everyday.

Our subjects are students who like to think they are capable and mature individuals. We believe that we have evidence to show otherwise... Just imagine a whole yearbook of blurry hands and the backs of heads the next time you are approached by a photographer. You will appreciate it later.

Fantasies

"My fantasy is to win one million dollars in the next Publisher's Clearing House Sweepstakes. Then, I'll get to be on TV to show off what I bought while telling everyone that they can do it too."

Keep Alert!

It's the middle of the day and you're in your most hated class. The teacher is droning on and on. The steady rhythm of the teacher's voice is putting you to sleep. Your mind slowly starts drifting from the room as you think of something more pleasant.

You begin to fantasize. The thoughts floating through your mind include the things you could be doing if you weren't in class- what happened last weekend, or what will happen this weekend, the meanings of your strange dreams the night before, or gorgeous members of the opposite sex.

For some students this was a common experience throughout the school day. Senior Susan Zager said she daydreamed because "my attention span is about 3.4 seconds long."

At the end of the period you return to class in time to catch the assignment for the next day. As you look at the homework, you realize that you are going to have problems doing it. Your logical mind compensates and points out to you that you would have had problems even if you would have listened, so you decide that you don't feel quite so bad as you continue on to your next class, where you probably experienced the identical routine.

Senior Bob Blumenstock gets some training in the art of picking up girls. Most students were satisfied with one-on-one relationships, but there was always room for fantasizing.

Senior Tony Sincebough imagines himself as the classy owner of this 1986 Mercedes Benz. Driving a "hot" car was the dream of many students.

The most unusual

Fast cars, beautiful women, endless amounts of money, gorgeous men, a trip to an exotic place...These fantasies are common to many. But what about those dreams that stray from the norm? Some people said that they want to:

- live a happy, healthy, and prosperous life in a world with peace.
- find myself in a different time or world with a giant adventure or some kind-maybe a king Arthur bit
- get a one in Mr. Golden's biology class
- be going out with a nymphomaniac who owns a liquor store
- drive without wearing a seatbelt
- have a date with God
- live in a positive world

Communication

Tele-fun

RRRRRRRInggggggggggg.

"Enid, the telephone is for you. I think that it is Ed, calling you for a DATE!" mother screeches into the phone in a piercing holler.

"MOOOOOOOTTTHHHHHHHEEEEEERRRRRRRRRRRRR! You are so queer! You know I can't stand Eddy-tell him that I am sick. Ed, yeeecchhl"

We have all gone through this at one time or another. It seemed parents always were trying to embarrass their children. Is the phone really worth it?

For some people, the telephone was their lifeline to the world, their 'raison de 'etre.' For others it was nothing but a nuisance item. Parents a lot of the time believed in the latter because they ended up becoming an answering machine, taking messages when their children were out.

The telephone does have some useful purposes, like calling your parents from the best party of the year, unable to dial the phone (thank god for technology, they had a pushbutton), at 12:01 to tell them that you might just happen to be a little late because the movie that you went to got out late, and not to worry.

Whew! If it hadn't been for telephones, just think what would've happened!

Depending on a student's schedule, there are between 20-30 minutes a day spent during school for passing periods. This time was planned for traveling from one classroom to another, but what else did resourceful students use this free time for? What did they really do?

5 minute break

The five minute passion-oops!-passing period was where couples engaged in massive cuddling and performed world record kissing; dinging to each other until the last possible moment was a common scene.

For some of the other girls who didn't have a member of the opposite sex permanently joined at the hip, passing periods were used to spray toxic substances for the purpose of molding their hair and to asphyxiate the people in the lockers next to them.

While others spent the time plastering their hair to their heads or their bodies to others, some people found that the passing period was a time to find out the latest developments in the soap opera of their lives.

The latest developments included who was going out with whom, where the parties were, who the hot men/women were, the answers to a Calculus test, and other trivial information important only to them.

But however the time was spent, most students found that this time was beneficial to all and necessary to round out one's high school education.

Stereotypes in our school

Student views

"I don't really pay stereotypes a lot of attention. There are a few groups that are 'astro' from the rest of the school, and if they are, maybe it is because they want to be." (Junior girl)

"Stereotypes are not entirely the student's fault. The parents have a great deal of influence on how the kids act. If a person cannot accept another because of his clothes or looks, then they have serious problems." (Junior boy)

"The masses of high school kids try to be something they're not just to fit in with a certain stereotypical groups such as jocks, freaks, preps, etc. and end up unhappy because they are not truly being themselves." (Senior girl)

PUNKERS: Punkers don't listen to anyone because they are too busy rebelling. Jeans, ripped T-shirts with underground slogans, spiked collars, spiked or dyed hair (if any at all), and anything black are common. Most likely to be seen at the Brickyard driving anything they can hot-wire and steal.

NERDS: Replicas of the Brady Bunch era. They are plain, shy, and if they were an animal, they would be a mouse. They are also non-socialites, and when necessary to go anywhere, they take the bus or have their moms drop them off at their destination.

TRENDER: The "perfect" people. Whole outfits that match from head to toe, china doll makeup, and non-movable hair are characteristics. Accessories galore, paisley, Forenza, and aerosol hairspray are worn everyday. Drives Fiero or Mustang and spends the weekend at the mall or at a party showing off new purchases.

PREPS: The typical prep is usually rich, but very conservative. Most are happy go lucky and never need to get a job because their parents provide for them all the Izods they could ever want. Polo shirts (collars up, of course), button down shirts, horn rim glasses, loafers, argyle socks, topsiders, and duck shoes in pink and green colors are key. Most likely to be seen driving BMW's, Volvo's, Peugots, and Suabs.

INTELLECTUALS: These are the smart, quiet, shy, and always-thinking conservatives. Clothes resemble a teacher's attire, glasses, and they seem to fade into the background. These non-socialites stay home on weekends and drive their parent's cars-Nova's or station wagons.

FREAKS: Their favorite place is outside, in front of the school where they indulge in one of their favorite pastimes- the intake of large doses of nicotine and tar. Can be easily spotted because of long hair, faded jeans, and jean jackets with their favorite heavy metal band silk-screened on the back. Transportation includes motorcycles or noisy cars with jacked up wheels.

JOCKS: Dumb, strong, all body-no brains type. One step above or below God (but which one is correct is hard to determine). Always seen wearing jeans, shirts or sweatshirts with a sports motif, and untied hi-tops. They drive any kind of fast, racy cars with good stereos. Starting and destroying parties is the weekend pastime.

Stereotypes among other schools

Each high school in Lincoln has a certain reputation which is assumed to be true by all of the other schools. These stereotypes can be helpful or very hurtful to the students involved. Most Southeast students indicated on the poll that stereotypes are "deceiving ideas" and that "there should be a way to get rid of them". Despite this, they still had their generalized stereotypes about the other schools. Below, we present these stereotypes as seen through the eyes of Southeast students. The Shield photographers who visited these schools reported a very positive, outgoing and friendly atmosphere at each school.

Southeast

"Speaking with an outsider's view and from what I've heard, most Omaha students see Southeast as the Hollywood High."

"I think Southeast has too many cliques. We have a wide variety of individuals. That part I like."

Lincoln High

"Don't walk down the halls there or you'll get knifed or mugged."

"Lincoln High is a school whose students have total independence and are complete individuals. There are no cliques, therefore, they are more capable of letting their true personality shine through."

Northeast

"I think the girls don't care much about how they look and the guys are either nerds or gearheads."

"A school with no judgemental ideas. The students are willing and wanting to be a friend to anyone."

East

"I guess they're all the rich, snotty types who want to flaunt their wealth."

Enthusiastic. A tight-knit group of high-spirited people who work hard to achieve their goals athletically, academically, and socially."

What 'cha doin' Friday night?

It's 3.35 and the bell has just rung. Bertha bounces to her locker in anticipation to find Stanley strutting over.

STANLEY: Hi, Bertha. You sure are looking intense today.

BERTHA(says glamorous-y): Thank you. I just got out of Body beating.

STANLEY: I can tell. I was just wondering how you were planning to use your free time this weekend. Why don't you give me a call.

BERTHA: Well, maybe- I might if I have time.

Bertha did find time in her busy schedule to give old Stanley a call. A call that changed the Saturday night agenda for both. An outing that consisted of a movie and ice cream at Ted and Wally's, then wasting time until the 12:00 curfew. (The act of wasting time was usually considered the high point of the evening for most).

Though this type of date was common, a girl asking a guy out was also acceptable.

"When a girl asks a guy for a date, the relationship becomes stronger because all the pressure is taken off the boy. Besides if they ask you out, they have to pay," said senior Jeff Chadwick.

Another type of date was where two or more people go out was a 'casual-friendship' date. This was well-liked because there are no commitments or ties.

"I think friendship dates are cool because it's a way to get to know someone better," said junior Jennifer Rogers.

Through dating, people got to know members of the opposite sex better, have fun, and waste time in Lincoln.

See you at...

Kwik Shop: Almost everyone has hung out there at least once, but now denies the fact.

McDonald's: A place to go when all other possibilities have ceased.

Downtown: A place to take a date to impress them.

Frats: A place that deals with women and men instead of girls and boys.

Brickyard: A place to go to hear local bands and watch your friends slam their bodies into one another.

Parties: A place to allow large quantities of inebriating substances to enter the bloodstream.

Excuses Excuses!

It's happened to almost all teenagers at least once. It's a weekend night and the options for the evening are endless. Your mind starts clicking into action as your parents inquire about your plans. You don't want to reveal your REAL intentions so you think of an excuse like:

I'm:

- going bowling
 - spending the night at a friend's house for a chaperoned small gathering
 - going to get gas
 - going to the library to do research
 - going to watch PG-13 movies with my friend's parents
 - going to church
 - going to the hospital to visit a friend
 - going to grandma's house
 - going to Hy-Vee for a late dinner of sample items
 - going to work on a friend's computer
 - going to sample pizza at Valentina's
- AND THE ALLTIME FAVORITE:
- I'm going to a movie.

Crusin' "O"

The main drag

It's Friday night! You and seven friends pile in your car which has a maximum capacity of four, and start heading down a main north-south arterial. No parties, no money, and you're not hungry, so where do you think you are going? "O" Street, of course!

The excitement builds as you draw nearer to the streaming headlights and the speeding cars. Turning onto "O"-you have reached your destination.

Your friends start screaming at anything outside the car that moves while you watch your speedometer so as not to attract any of those blue and white vehicles lurking in the shadows. You drive the full length of the street, which by the way is the longest main street in United States, and then turn back and go all the way to the other end, developing a kind of a pattern, all the while attracting as much attention as possible.

Once in a while someone in another car will acknowledge you or maybe even talk to you! You receive a total of 17 date offers from those gorgeous UNI fraternity studs, not to mention the 32 offers from nerds. You drive away from them as quickly as possible of course, but this has made your whole evening worthwhile.

After taking your loud friends home, you pull into your driveway noticing the gas tank is empty and you have added 77.3 miles to your mother's car. You sit and reflect upon your evening for a moment before going in to bed: "I hope I have as much fun tomorrow night!"

People

Better Knights were made possible by all people

School can be defined as a building where instruction is given. But there is one important element missing from this definition. People! Without the teachers, coaches, and students that made up Southeast, it would not have existed. The building itself came to life during the time the Knights entered its doors in the morning until they left many hours later.

More than just ordinary people, the Knights were singers, athletes, debaters, actors, and painters. They were cheerleaders, student council members and musicians.

But more than just being associated with groups of whatever sort, the Knights were individuals. A typical Southeast student was not to be found.

Some characteristics, however, were shared by each of the three grade divisions. Take the seniors for instance. They were confident that they knew more than the rest. They had been through it all before and knew how things should be done. But behind their confident exteriors, most seniors felt apprehension at one time or another about their futures. And as the year came to an end, they were reflective.

"It's nice being a senior and looking back on all the fun and scary times. I was scared when I came here, and now I'm scared that I'm leaving," said senior Tina Diekman.

Juniors were basically easy going. They were over the fear and anxiety of their sophomore days. Senioritis and thoughts of college and life after high school could be kept in the back of their minds. They weren't yet worldly, but knew that the next year it would be their turn to reign.

"As a junior, I feel more accepted than as a sophomore. You can be yourself, and not have to be as concerned about what other people think. Everyone's growing up, and the parties are hot," said junior Laurie Christy.

And who could forget the sophomores? Some said that they would like to. But in all reality, sophomores were seldom treated as second-class citizens. They were just as much a part of the goings on as the juniors and seniors were. Once the adjustment from junior high to high school was made, the sophomores fit right in.

"I'm having fun. It's a lot better than junior high. I knew it was going to be better than Pound. The teachers are less strict, and there's more to do here," said sophomore Jim Barker.

Providing us with invaluable education was the faculty. The teachers and coaches would be the first to say that the longer days do make better Knights.

NO, THESE students are not begging for money on the streets. They are following instructions given to them by mime Tom Berky at an assembly.

THE STAR CITY PARADE was important to many Southeast students because the Marching Band participated in it. This clown in the parade seems to amuse the opposing spectators.

SPORTING EVENTS are popular places for students to rendez-vous and support the Knights. Plans for the rest of the evening were often concocted also.

JOHN LARSEN SEEMS to be the center of attention among this small group of snacking teachers who honored Principal Wes Larterbach for his top administration award.

TEACHERS ARE people, too, and deserve to be interacted with. Here senior Bob Holbert and junior Katie Dimon converse with Tom Douglas.

Last year proves to be best of all

Regardless of popular belief, school is a very important part of a student's life. When asked about school, some students may say that school is dumb or boring, but when digging a little deeper, different facts can be found. Most students even had a favorite year of school and many memorable experiences that involved school.

The experiences that some seniors have had during their final year of school may have swayed their favorite year decision.

"My senior year has probably been my favorite year. Being a senior gives you a kind of authority," said senior Bob Miller.

It seemed most seniors would agree with Miller on that one. For other seniors though, the authority is not as important as what they do with it.

"Being a senior means that you don't have to dodge people in the hallway. You just walk right through the crowds," Dawn Sims said.

Almost unanimously, seniors seemed to find 12th grade to be their best year.

"There is something about being a senior that no other grade-not even ninth grade-has," said senior Brian Porter.

The senior year has always been and always will be special. So, juniors and sophomores will have to anticipate their own senior year, while seniors enjoyed the freedom and the new experiences that this year held for them.

Expenses add up during final year

The final year of high school is a time of making many lasting memories...one being how much money was spent. "Senior year is a very expensive year," senior Betty Douglas said. "I just hope I can afford to go to college after it's all over."

Senior pictures were a big expense for some.

Senior Nancy Nelson said her parents "were shocked by the cost of them, but they also knew it was something worthwhile. Y'know...going out in style."

In addition to pictures, the price of being a senior may have included college applications, standardized test fees, graduation announcements, cap and gown rental, and class rings. "Everything adds up," senior Robin Falls said. "It seems like there's always something to pay for."

These senior expenses, however, were not the most costly, according to senior Matt Briggs. His biggest expense was lunch, "because you have to go out to lunch every day when you're a senior." Briggs and senior Steve Zabel both made it clear that when one is a senior, one does not EVER eat in the cafeteria.

Another major expense for some seniors was cars and gasoline. Falls said she "couldn't get along without it" because she had more activities than ever before.

The activities themselves were expensive for some seniors. Nelson said, "Last year was ho-hum, but this year I go out a lot." She got a part-time job to cover the costs of going out frequently, she said, because "my folks are paying for all the school stuff"

College prep classes offer info

"The school can prepare anyone at Southeast if they're willing to learn." That's what Scott Lippstreu, a Southeast graduate and Georgetown freshman, said when commenting on how well Southeast prepared him for college.

A number of college prep classes are offered at Southeast.

Lippstreu said that A.P. grammar helped him most because it taught him to "expect to work a lot in college."

Andy Loth, another Southeast graduate and Washington University (St. Louis) freshman, said that physics helped him a little bit because the tests were similar to tests in college.

"I don't think anything in high school could have prepared me for college," said Loth. He explained that college is different in the sense that there is more homework and a lot more studying.

Another Southeast graduate and University of Nebraska Lincoln freshman, Cathy Peters, said that PSSC physics and chemistry helped her. She said that it "was like going through it again" because she had already studied some of the subject matter in these classes.

"If you've got an idea of what you're going to major in, then take the classes that are directed to your field. The tougher your classes in high school, the easier college courses are."

Art Hillman, counselor, said he visits with graduates each year concerning how Southeast helped prepare them for college, and what more the school could have done.

"I think overall that students feel pretty good about the program they receive at Southeast," Hillman reported.

Mid-term grads get a head start

Requirements for mid-term graduates are no different than requirements for students graduating in June, according to Assistant Principal for Student Services, Don Darnell. A student must have 150 total credits and have the necessary number of credits in selected areas.

One student who met the requirements and graduated early was Paula Dee Busacker. "I've been planning to do this since I was a sophomore," said Busacker. She added that she knew what she wanted to do in the future, and this will help her to get a head start on it. Busacker lived in the dorms and attended UNI during the second semester.

Busacker would fit Counselor Art Hillman's description of a mid-term graduate. Hillman said most mid-term grads have "a unique characteristic that urges them to go on."

Mid-term grads usually plan to start college right away, work for a semester and the summer and then start college, or just want to get out of school, according to Hillman. He added there are always students with their own reasons for graduating early.

Susan Baird's decision to graduate early was based on the fact that her parents moved out of state in February. Baird said she would be "missing lots of little things, but I'll be back for graduation."

There was no formal graduation for January graduates, but they were invited to come back in the spring for commencement exercises, Darnell said. He added that the graduates received a letter from Dr. Lauterbach, congratulating them on finishing their high school careers.

Adulthood pressures are realized

Turning 18 allowed some special privileges such as the right to vote, but for males, turning 18 also presented a conflict—draft registration.

Males of "sound body and mind" were allowed thirty days on each side of their 18th birthday to put themselves on file with the Selective Service, according to a post office official.

"The government needs some procedure to protect the country" said junior Ben Harris. On the other hand, senior Jeff Chadwick said that registering is "against my principals and a scary thought."

Another problem arose with student aid being withheld for those who did not register.

One possibility for those opposed to the draft was to register as a conscientious objector. To do this, one registered normally, and then if a draft were to occur, they would go through a series of interviews. One senior who chose this route was senior Doug Thompson.

"I would like to defend my country, but in different ways than killing people, such as being a member of non-combat personnel like a cook or a medic," Thompson said.

"If there is a draft, then I'm moving to Canada," said junior Jim Poggemeyer about the draft.

"My religious beliefs prevent me from participating in war and killing," said senior Bruce Wrightsman.

"I oppose registering as a whole, but if women registering for the draft would bring about greater equality, then I can not consciously oppose it," said senior Martha Hoppe.

Higher education not free for some

After graduation, most seniors at Southeast go on to some type of post-secondary education, most commonly a college or university. For many students an important concern was how to pay for their schooling.

While some seniors' parents pay for the cost, others, such as Bruce Wendel, are on their own.

"About two or three years ago, my parents told me I was going to have to pay," said Wendel. Since then he has taken a variety of jobs to help save some money-including McDonald's, the Lincoln country club, and the YMCA.

A few students, such as Doug Thompson, welcome the chance. "I feel I'll appreciate my education much more if I pay for it. I welcome the challenge and responsibility."

Few seniors have the entire tuition all saved before they enroll as freshmen. Wendel said that he has "about two years worth, depending on where I go." The rest of the money will come from continued employment or special sources such as scholarships, work study programs, and student loans.

"I haven't really looked into that stuff yet. I've got to get on the stick," Thompson said. "I'm a little worried because President Reagan is slashing student loan programs to the bone."

While Wendel said that the University of Nebraska Lincoln was his "second choice, I may end up going there." UNL is one of the least expensive options to Southeast students, averaging about $1200 a year, according to Wendel.

Seniors suffer from common ailment

Senioritis. The word isn't even in the dictionary, but is commonly used by high school seniors. What exactly is the meaning of the word? Is it even real?

"The frustration of being held down by an institution that no longer serves your purpose, meaning school, people, etc.," was senior Mary Lawlor's definition of the word.

Senior Jamie Green said that for him, senioritis was defined as "being sick of the mundane schedule of high school."

Lower grades, laziness with regards to schoolwork, and an overall "I-don't-care" attitude can all be linked to senioritis at one time or another.

"Extreme apathy and excessive tardiness," were other symptoms, according to Green.

Senioritis has been experienced by almost all seniors in history. Some people saw senioritis as an excuse to act squirrely, while others truly experienced the trauma and reality of senioritis.

For those who did experience the full effect of senioritis, a lot felt that escape was a way to deal with their feelings.

"I get in a car, put on loud tunes, and drive," said Lawlor.

A feeling of the need for change occurs in almost all grades, but seniors especially felt the need, and at this time, senioritis usually set in.

"People get fed up with needing passes to go to the bathroom, and having their mom call to confirm that they're really sick," said Green.

"Perfect" people bully sophomores

Being a senior...it's supposed to be one of the best years of your life, and most seniors tried their darndest to make it so. There were so many things that made the "senior year" stand apart from the rest of their lives.

It was a special time, because many of the seniors' closest friends, people that they had gone to school with for up to 13 years, could have been moving away for college. It was this feeling of alienation and insecurity that will make college students wish for their senior year once again.

Then there were those senior parties. Parties where one could say, "Get the h$*! out of here!!" to all the juniors and sophomores that happen to show up, because you were a senior, and could be as cocky as you wanted to be.

An advantage, however, to having turned 18 while in high school, was the ability to merely cross the state border and become an "adult." In the states of Iowa and Kansas, you could purchase 3.2 beer. 3.2 beer has the same taste as any other beer, but the alcoholic content is lowered considerably. In order to have the privilege of purchasing this beverage, a student must have turned 18 by July 31, 1985. Of course, a few seniors had other methods for getting alcoholic beverages and other substances whenever the mood became prevalent.

These are some of the very reasons that some parents didn't trust their senior "children" very much. Curlews may have been reluctantly dropped or lengthened upon the students' behavior shown to their parents. These parents knew that the "senior year" was nothing more than a preparation for the intellectual and party scene at college.

Seniors coach the underclassmen

To be a senior in high school is a position greatly admired by all.

Many underclassmen look upon them for their knowledge in classes taken years before. But one thing juniors and sophomores cherish even more is their advice, especially about school.

Seniors of Southeast were recently asked: "What would you have done differently in high school?" Their answers split into two opposite categories. Some wanted to become more involved with school as a sophomore, while others wished they would have slowed down in their commitments.

Laura Deckinger, president of Lincoln's Junior Achievement, now desired "to slow down a little bit." Deckinger, who has been very active most of her high school life wanted to "work a little bit harder on my grades."

"I would have tried to express myself as a person... tried to talk to more people," said Stacy Collingham. Collingham wishes she would of had more fun and not have worried so much about grades.

But let's not forget the other seniors who wished they could have become more involved with high school.

"I should have taken school more seriously. There are scholarships I would have liked to have, now I can't try for," said Susan Zager.

Monica McInturf said she would have liked to have been more supportive of Southeast's athletic teams and more active in clubs. A talented singer, McInturf has been involved in numerous musicals and singing groups.

Seniors

Advice
cont.

But all these seniors do have something in common. They are willing to give advice to juniors and sophomores. They all encouraged their fellow underclassmen not to be afraid to get involved in high school.

"Don't be afraid of leadership positions, go for it. Be everything you can be in high school," said Deckinger who strongly believes being involved in many high school activities will help when you apply for scholarships and college.

McInturf gave advice on not to worry so much about grades, have school spirit and always be a part of the school.

"Get good grades. Be as sociable as you can. Try to plan your future (where you will go to college) in your junior year," said Kalan Kessler.

"Be yourself. Try to express yourself as much as possible. Don't be intimidated by the upper class just because they're a year ahead of you. Don't be afraid to voice your opinions," said Cheri Jackson.

"Don't get burned out, if you don't know your own limits. Don't be afraid to work toward some things," said Jeff Jeter. "Get involved in a club you feel comfortable with.... don't be afraid to get involved, high school passes fast."

Knight and Lady Senior honor continues

Knight and Lady was an honor given to eight seniors who had proved themselves at Southeast. This year, due to a tie for both Knight and Lady, ten were honored.

The procedures for being chosen for these titles has taken different routes. In earlier years, (1959), the yearbook contained a full page picture of one Knight and one Lady. Gradually, every year the pictures become a little more casual, and more people were added. Also in the past, the yearbook staff controlled the method which determined who would be honored. But in 1980 Student Council took over the duties.

The Student Council drew up a ballot which consisted of specific qualifications and distributed them to counselors and staff members. They then nominated the seniors they felt met the qualifications. The outcome was five "Knights" and five "Ladies" that met the specifications of: 1) involvement in school; 2) involvement in the community; 3) scholastic achievement; 4) respect of faculty and staff, and 5) respect of fellow students. Presented on these two pages are the honored Knights and Ladies of 1986.

Involvement never ceased for Knight Bob Holbert. He was elected to three years of Student Council, Prom King, Homecoming royalty, Class president and president of the Nebraska Association of Student Councils. He also was a member of Debate, Soccer Club, Ski Club and wrote "Ram Bub" for the Clarion.

The Lincoln Youth Symphony and Southeast's own music department gave Lady Betty Douglas and her flute a place to shine. Accompanying her number one rank in the class, she was a three year Honor Roll member, president of German Club, an officer in Nova Club, and earned a seat on the National Honor Society.

Lady Kris Jones enjoyed showing her horse outside of school, but inside school she was a Student Council vice-president, a two year Shirette, Class Officer, French Club treasurer, Prom Queen, and danced in Knight of Knights.

Student manager for both varsity football and basketball, Knight Jeff Jeter was also an active participant in French Club, "S" Club, and FCA. He also performed in two plays and was a member of Drama Club. Along with his many activities, he kept his grades on the Honor Roll level for three years and was a member of National Honor Society.

Wrestling, "S" Club, Symphonic and Marching Band and Ski Club were just a few of Knight Randy Goldenstein's accomplishments. He was elected to a Spanish Club office and played football for three years as well as earning a place on the National Honor Society.

Three year Honor Roll member and member National Honor Society complete Lady Selina Shultz's academic accomplishments. Outside of class, she was a two year Shirette, a Knight of Knights dancer, and a Miller and Paine Hi Visor.

Vice president of her class Student Council, Art Masters, Drama Club, Thespians, Prom royalty, Intramurals, and National Honor Society were just a few accomplishments by Lady Martha Lauber. She also became involved with Knight of Knights school musicals where she played the lead in "Hello Dolly", play productions, Court Choir and Ars Nova Coro.

Building his interest around the arts, Knight Jim Hanna makes presentations. While maintaining his three year Honor Roll position, he prepared for an audience with national involvement in speech competition plus Debate, Drama Club, Thespians, Knight of Knights, Court Choir, musicals and every play.

As National Honor Society president and Debate president, Knight Rob McEntarffer steers his activities toward the stage. He was a part of Court Choir, Stage band, Orchestra, Drama Club, Thespians, musicals, Knight of Knights and most play productions. He also qualified for national competition in Debate.

Lady Susy Martin was a player on the varsity volleyball team and a member of the varsity basketball team for two years where she played a forward. She was on Honor Roll all three years and also a member of National Honor Society.

Get up and get going

The break of dawn, the start of a day, a new beginning. Mornings are a great experience for some of us, and for others it was little less than a small disaster. The feeling of being alive and refreshed, or the feeling of being dead and grouchy are descriptions of morningtime.

Senior Steven Zabel said: "I like mornings because when you go out into the cold crisp air, it tingles every nerve ending in my body and makes my life worth living." Zabel usually got up at 6:45, stumbled to the shower, got dressed, and then he ate his chocolate fudge pop-tarts with a large glass of milk. He then hopped into his Fiat and zoomed to school at 7:25, in order to get his first-row parking spot.

For others, it was sheer misery getting up at the break of dawn. Junior Doug Curry described his morning "I'm lying there and my dad tells me that it is time to get up, I try to wait until the last possible moment to get up, then I plop into the shower. It makes me feel queasy thinking about it."

Senior Jessica Wright had to wake up every Saturday at 5:00 to open up at Village Inn. She said that it really ruins the night before, but she tried to live through it. "I needed the money."

Junior Tricia Phillips said, "I'd love to be able to sleep in, but for some reason I always wake up early." She said that she really hates mornings. During the school year she woke up at 6:30 and then showered, got dressed, and ate breakfast. During the summer, weekends, and on vacations Phillips got up about 10:30 am.

No matter how students felt about mornings, they were a part of each day and will continue to be. It was just another thing that we had to learn to cope with, or to thrive by, and we did.

Hobby is fun, valuable

Businessmen in three-piece suits come into Trade-A-Tape/Comic Center to pick up reserved comic books, and they aren't for their kids, senior Scott Sutter, a collector, said.

There aren't any stereotypical comic book collectors, according to Sutter, but the owner of Trade-A-Tape, Larry Lorenz, said buyers are "mostly guys anywhere from 12 to 25 years old. It's probably their major hobby."

Comics as a hobby is nothing new, but Lorenz said sales have been going up recently, and Marvel Comics has had record sales in the last few years. He attributes this to comic shops such as Trade-A-Tape, because "your basic grocery and drug store doesn't push comics at all. In the '70's, comics were at a low point," but then shops such as his came along.

The most popular comic book series in his shops is "The Uncanny X-men," which is about "several heroes who try to save the world, even while they are the objects of prejudice because they are mutants, and aren't as wholesome as the "Avengers", said senior Sarah Richardson. "They also always seem to be framed."

"X-men" is popular for several reasons. "The characters have a good chemistry," Lorenz said. "People can relate." It also has great art and great stories, he added.

Sutter said he liked the series because "unlike most comics, these characters also have some shadow of reality. They aren't 'goody-goody' like Superman."

D.C., the publisher of "Superman", "Batman", and "Wonder Woman", has had very bad sales in recent years, Lorenz said. "Wonder Woman" was cancelled in the summer because it "just wasn't selling." Richardson said she was upset about this because she'd been collecting "Wonder Woman" for about seven years, and had 140 issues.

Prices for comic books range from 65 cents for a plain Marvel comic to $6.95 for a "graphic novel".

Vandals seek revenge

Vandalism—everyone's done it or knows someone who has. But why? What purpose does it serve?

Some students said it's a way to waste time; others found it a way to get revenge but most students interviewed felt that fun was the main basis for their actions.

"I enjoy doing it to my friends as a joke and it's a great way to inflict damage to my enemies," said an anonymous junior boy. "It also is kinda fun just to see how much you can get away with."

One previous vandalizer told a common story of when the person got caught for vandalism and was charged a small amount. The next time the person did a similar vandalism, he was charged a much larger amount and was punished severely.

"I think it's outrageous that I got in so much trouble for such a simple 'prank'. What makes authority feel they can treat me like a criminal for a childish prank," said an unnamed senior boy.

All these unintentional and intentional incidents must be put in their original state, which can take both money and time. Southeast alone has had $3,552 of vandalism done just in the 1984-85 school year.

Vandalism included both risks and bad after affects, but many students felt the fun was worth taking the risks.

As one senior boy said, "It helps the economy because it makes people buy more which then helps our society as a whole prosper, and I have fun helping."

Tests bring stress

High school students face many stressful situations. One of those situations is test taking.

"We contribute to our own anxieties," said counselor Chuck Evans. "Lack of preparation and organization for tests are part of our reasons for anxieties," continued Evans.

Study habits among students differ. "I pay attention in class and review my notes," said senior Laura Deckinger about her study habits.

Some students become nervous about tests even when they study. "I'd study a few days before and I would go blank when the test was put in front of me," said senior Benny Green.

Being physically relaxed and being prepared help a lot, according to Evans.

Sometimes students cram the night before a test. "I study the night before, then when I see the test my mind goes blank," junior Lisa Sebek said.

For others though, the test doesn't bother them. Sophomore Lisa Doriety fit into this category. "I just take a test and get what I get," she said.

However a student chose to study they discovered if their methods worked when they got their tests back with a grade on it.

Transfers adjust well

"The classes here are easier than they were in Carmel," Chris Peters said. Peters formally attended Carmel High School in Indiana.

Peters, a senior, started coming to Southeast in August of the year. She notes the differences between Southeast and Carmel. In Carmel there were more clicks. Here the students are very friendly she said.

Carmel also had a closed campus and a smoking lounge for students, said Peters.

"Here they are more liberal with what they wear," said sophomore Scott Petro. Petro attended Perkins County High School in Grant, Nebraska. If you went to Perkins with a crazy hairstyle "you'd probably get beat up," Petro commented.

Perkins county does have open campus. "The only place to go is the pizza place," he said. The students would just stay at school, he said. The school's population was about 105 students. Petro commented that the students here are very friendly.

Southeast seemed more exciting to Todd Long, who preferred Southeast. Long attended Northeast during his sophomore year. "The classes here are a lot tougher; they push harder," the senior said. Long said he had some friends here who attended Southeast before he did.

"Everyone dresses how they want to," Susan Murray said. Murray attended Superior High School in Superior, Nebraska. Murray said she likes Southeast better. "There's a lot more to choose from," she said. She said people here are hard to get to know because the school is so big.

-Rose Plank

Many students grow to become bored with their high schools and transfer to another one. Southeast is blessed with the presence of many of these bored students.

Twins share interest

Double takes, double trouble, and double fun-all spell one thing-twins.

"Sharing clothes and getting help on homework" are some advantages sophomores Jodi and Nikki Stineman have found as twins.

"I liked having our birthday's on the same day," said sophomore Susanne Schmelling. Her brother Paul said that being a twin is "neat because you get extra attention."

Being identical twins have given Sam and Steve Clarence, juniors, an extra advantage. At their ninth grade promotion, they switched places. "Everyone knew except our counselors, teachers, and some of the audience," said Sam.

There are some disadvantages, though. Brad Hunt, senior, said that when one does better than the other it can be real easy to become jealous.

"It was hard for me when Jodi made the Southeast Varsity basketball team as a freshman," said Nikki Stineman. "It seemed like she got more attention and knew more people."

Brad Hunt said it is a "drag" especially with graduation coming up. He said he would like more individual attention.

"It bothers me when people ask stupid questions like, 'which one is older?'" said Paul Schmelling.

Twins have been known to experience "unusual happenings". Sam Clarence said that sometimes he and Steve find that they are thinking the same thing or singing the same song.

Jodi Stineman said that when she broke her arm, Nikki felt pains in her arm even though nothing was wrong with it. Nikki said that when Jodi gets sick she usually gets sick right after her.

Having mutual interests seems to be a characteristic of twins.

Sam and Steve Clarence are both involved in football and intramural basketball. They said that the only difference between them is their girlfriends.

The Schmellings' and the Stinemans' mutual interests include sports also. Jodi and Nikki are involved in track, basketball, volleyball, and cross country.

Slim and trim are in

The fitness craze could have been one of many fads that go through this country each year, but instead of becoming one, it seems to have become a permanent tradition. A few years ago seemingly overnight, people began running, lifting weights, taking aerobics classes, and generally becoming fitness fanatics in mass numbers.

The two major ways to become physically fit are the right way and the wrong way. "Harder isn't necessarily better," said Jazzercise instructor Nina Halama. "Working out for more than 20 or 30 minutes at the maximum rate pushes the heart past its physiologically sound limits."

Senior Angie Hunt was a participant in Mimi Kuebler's exercise class, Toning For Fitness. She said that it was a good class, because it got the requirement for gym out of the way, and it was a fun way to get in shape. "You feel much better about yourself when you do something good for your body," said Hunt.

Many new exercise facilities have opened due to the new exercise interest. Jazzercise, for example, a dance-fitness program, created by Judi Sheppard Misset, combines exercise with dance routines. Jazzercise had many studios opened before the aerobic craze really began, but this has aided the company in getting a multi-million dollar industry going from coast-to-coast.

Many places such as Mademoiselle, Prairie Life Center, and the Racquet Club have come into being. These establishments usually offer exercise classes, Nautilus weight equipment, a whirl pool, a swimming pool, and sometimes a running track. For a base price, members get unlimited use of these facilities for a specified period of time. At Prairie Life Center, this base price is $250 for the initiation fee, and then $40 per month.

Exercise has caused many new businesses to come into being. Dance shops and stores featuring dancing clothes are much more popular now.

"People get caught up in looking good," said Mimi Kuebler, physical education teacher at Southeast. She said that she exercises in plain old sweats because she feels it's unnecessary and impractical to dress up to exercise, not to mention expensive. Leotards can cost from $12 (for plain old saggy black nylon) to $45 or more for a cotton and lycra blend. Tights are in a slightly lower price range, though.

Kuebler said she thinks that the exercise craze has caused a new look in fashion. "People go from their jobs to someplace to work-out and therefore dress more casual." Sweats of all sorts, colors, and styles, are much more popular today, too. People like clothes that are bright and expensive because they can show off what they have or have not accomplished.

For whatever reason, people today are exercising. Fitness has been important for years, but now society hears more about it, it's more socially accepted, and appeals to a wider variety of people.

As Kuebler put it, "...over the past ten years, people have become more aware of the fact that keeping your body healthy makes a more pleasant life for you."

16 is long awaited age

From the time most students enter junior high until they are 16, they anticipate the time when they'll get their driver's license. The long awaited time that they'll no longer have to be carted around in a family station wagon by parents.

There are also those who don't look forward to driving, such was the case with senior Haley Malcom. She was not allowed to get her driver's license until she turned 18, or got a job, whichever came first. Malcom said she didn't feel the need or the desire to drive.

"I'd rather bike or run than drive," said Malcom.

"It's not so bad being driven around," said sophomore Brent Johnson. "My parents aren't too strict about it (being driven around by other people)." But Johnson still anticipated the time when he could drive himself around.

Those who do look forward to driving have their reasons. Junior Liz Doan received a brand new black Pulsar on the 16th birthday. This gave her an incentive to drive.

"I don't know what I did before I got my car. Now it's the only way me and my friends have to get around," Doan said.

There are advantages and also disadvantages of having a driver's license.

Sophomore Mitch Parker said he thought some advantages were "not having to wait for a ride home, going out for lunch, and being able to go shopping without parents."

Disadvantages included high costs of repair, insurance, tickets, and gas.

"I pay for everything- insurance, gas and maintenance," said junior Leanne Davis. "My parents bought the car for me though."

For most students though, receiving their drivers license was an important part of high school life. With licenses, students obtained more freedom and also an added responsibility.

Sophs learn to adjust

While high school can be very different for different people, some experiences are universal, such as taking the required English 10 and Cit. Issues classes, turning 16, attending pep rallies, and changing from a junior high to Southeast. Entering high school signals that a student has entered that last phase of public education.

The junior high years have a major influence on what a person does at Southeast. Jesse Petsch who attended Irving said, "I knew people from other schools and that helped me adjust." He also said that he likes high school because there are extra-cirrcular activities that he can participate in, while in junior high he had to pursue his interests outside of school.

Most sophomores agreed that high school is a challenge. "I definitely have more homework in high school," said Geoff Balser, a previous student of Irving. "But I think I'm learning more."

Steph Neid who attended Pound said, "High school is a lot more work, but it's a lot more fun."

"The work is a lot harder, but having specialized teachers makes its a lot more fun," said Scott Smith who attended Pound. Basler said that he likes the teachers in specialized subjects like biology because he thinks they know a lot in their field; in junior high teachers were not as specialized.

Almost everyone agreed that extra-cirrcular activities help a person adjust to high school.

"Clubs help you meet new people; people that have the same interests as you," said Petsch. Jane Peters, of Irving, agreed that clubs provide the opportunity to do a lot of different activities that people find enjoyable.

"There are a lot more interscholastic sports in high school, that offer more school spirit then there was in junior high," said Susan Brown who attended Pound. Students are able to specify their choices and have a more supported atmosphere in high school sports.

Junior Brian Gordon, a previous student of Lefler said: "Junior high was a prison compared to the options we have at Southeast."

Most student agree that although high school involves more work, they welcomed the challenges and benefitted from the many extra activities.

Honor system changes

Along with all the other changes that took place this year in the school system, honor roll requirements also were revised, and some students may have found it harder to achieve this goal.

The intent of the new honor roll regulations was to make it harder to get on honor roll, and to make it more meaningful to those who do get on it, said Principal Wesley Lauterbach.

The new requirement stated that honor roll participants will be selected on a semester basis with five classes or 25 credit hours required. Students selected must earn a semester's grade point average of 2.00 or better on the 1-7 scale with one being the best.

Certain classes such as summer school, any course taken pass/fail, work-study, and student assisting do not count toward honor roll.

In previous years, requirements for honor roll was 20 credit hours of ones and/or twos with no failing grades.

"I think it's better (the new requirements) because before it was too easy to get on the honor roll," said senior Betty Douglas.

The requirements, which took effect at the beginning of the school year, are the product of a move two years ago by staff and student groups of the four Lincoln Public High Schools. Lauterbach said he has the general impression that Lincoln High raised the issue.

The decision to put the new requirements into effect was made by the principals of the four high schools, and by Dr. James Travis. Travis is the assistant superintendent of curriculum.

"The feeling for change came to us from the staff and student groups," said Lauterbach.

The last time honor roll regulations were changed was between 10 and 15 years ago.

"I think in changing the honor roll, they were attempting to make it more uniform through the city," said counselor Chuck Evans. "I think it's going to be easier to be on it. It will be more available to more people, and before some people didn't even try to make it (honor roll)." -Derek Levenberger and Paula Danekas Quarter report card time is a time of tension as it can decide if one can place on honor roll. Junior Holly Grossbart and her mother examine Holly's report card to determine progress towards honor roll.

Facts found in trash

What do Coke cans, Reese's peanut butter cup wrappers, old passes, Clarions, book covers, milk cartons, McDonalds cups, and a half-eaten pop tart have in common? A lot of these items find their final resting place in a garbage can.

When actually thinking about trash, one may find many psychological meanings. For example, from trash one can tell the likes and dislikes of people.

Garbage has been studied a lot, said psychology teacher Tom Douglas. Sociologists have studied the garbage of people all the way back to the cavemen era. By discovering middens (places where the trash was buried), the levels of their culture could be found.

At Southeast, after studying trash, favorite restaurants, candy, and pop choices could be determined.

McDonald's was the overall winner in the restaurant department with more cups and paperbags found than any other kind.

"The reason I go to McDonald's is because of the location and the price of food is reasonable," said junior Andrew Russell.

Taco Inn, Wendy's, Runza, and Rax garbage was also frequently seen.

Coca-cola products dominated students' cola choices. Diet Coke, Coke Classic, and Cherry Coke cans were the most abundant.

When walking down the school halls, one may have seen paper, cups, chewed gum, and gum wrappers on the floor though the janitors swept the halls twice a day or more often if needed.

After collecting all the trash in six dumpsters "jammed way past full," according to custodian Butch Portche, garbage trucks came four to five times a week to haul it away.

-Paula Danekas

Laughter fills halls

Thursday night at 7 p.m. the number one television show on the air comes on. Bill Cosby, star of the number one "Cosby Show", has a special gift. The gift is being able to make others laugh.

"Laughter is excellent medicine," psychology teacher Tom Douglas said. As a teacher, Douglas says he likes to joke around with students. Laughter is a good tension reliever, it also helps a student's state of mind and their physical body, according to Douglas.

Douglas believes one has to be careful when dealing with humor. What may be funny to one person may not be funny to another Douglas said. Humor may be in poor taste if it makes fun of a physical condition or an ethnic background added Douglas.

Laughter can be a source of embarrassment to some students if others think their laugh is strange.

Stephanie Simons' laugh is one which some students think is a little out of the ordinary. Simons said of her laugh, "it's not funny (to me), but it's long."

Simons said she has been teased about her laugh. One person suggested that we, "tape it (her laugh) and sell the tape to make money," said Simons.

When not laughing at a comedian or joking with a teacher, many students are found laughing with their friends. "We laugh about a lot of stuff," sophomore Kim Kluth said.

Whoever or whatever students were laughing at during the year, if it had a memorable quality to it, it would be a looked back on and remembered fondly by those involved.

Names make identity

Whats in a name? Does it make the person-or does the person make the name? These questions are often asked. Many students with unique and individual names felt that the name had made a difference in the responses they get from others.

"Everyone always makes fun of me and no one can ever pronounce it right," said sophomore Staci Zwiebel, whose last name is last in the student listing.

Some students found that the responses they get from their names can both humorous and cutting

"When I was in grade school everyone used to call me 'Oreo', which was funny at first but got old," said senior Ori Twersky. Zwiebel remembered peers using her name in childish rhymes like: "webble, webble don't fall down."

Unique names can also have advantages in situations. "My last name is first in the student listing. It makes me feel special at times and gives me authority," said senior Jill Acker

All names originate from somewhere for some certain reason, but some names seem to have interesting backgrounds.

"My last name originates from Germany and means 'onion', I think it is fun having a name that stands for something, but its kinda embarassing being named after a vegetable," said Zwiebel.

"If I had the choice of a common name or mine, I'd rather have mine because its extremly original. If I was in a room of two million people and someone called Ori, I'd be the only one to look," said Twersky.

Looks valued by many

"It's not how you feel, it's how you look, and you look marvelous."

-Billy Crystal-

This idea has been around since mirrors have been in lockers. Mirrors were glanced at and/or stared at intensely many times during the school day. Even the restroom mirrors got their share of business during the day.

Senior Ane Hasselbalch had a mirror in her locker which she used in the morning and after lunch to "touch up" her look.

It was rumored that sophomore girls spent more time trying to get that "special look" than any other group at Southeast. Hasselbalch believed this to be true because, "you try to impress everybody when you're a sophomore."

Some students don't even care how they look during the day such as sophomore Jason Brasch, whose version of dressing up was "wearing socks".

"I just throw on my clothes," said Brasch. He added that he usually spends about 40 minutes getting ready in the morning which included time to take a shower but not to eat breakfast. "If there's a clean shirt in the room, I wear it," Brasch said.

Other students spent more time getting ready for a day of school. Hasselbalch said she spent about 50 minutes getting herself together in the morning. Her definition of looking good was, "feeling good about what you're wearing".

Whether students spent a lot of time getting and keeping their "special look" during the day or not too much time on it, was up to each individual. It was all of the different opinions on what looked right that kept the halls of Southeast colorful.

-Troy Vasa and Carol Yost

Before school is a good time to be sure of one's appearance. Struggling for good views of themselves, students prepare their own looks for the approaching day.

At an early morning celebration, Dr. Lauterbach was given a set of stamps by the faculty in honor of his award. Dr. Schoo, superintendent, presents these stamps that will become a part of Dr. Lauterbach's collection.

Lauterbach honored

What he thought was going to be a "hot parent conference" turned out to be hot coffee and donuts at a special award presentation for Principal Wesley Lauterbach by the Student Council and teachers.

The presentation was planned after Lauterbach was named the Outstanding Educator from Nebraska in the "In honor of Excellence" program. Vice-principal Larry Eaton set the scene by calling Lauterbach the night before telling him that there was to be "a hot parent conference" the next morning. Instead, Lauterbach was suprised by the secret party

The program honoring Lauterbach was sponsored by the National Association of Secondary School Principals and the Burger King Corporation. 51 principals and 52 teachers were chosen to paarticipate in the nation's only joint program of recognition of principals and teachers. All involved received a five day all expense paid trip to Florida for a series of meetings concerning education.

"I was surprised and pleased," said Lauterbach about the honor. "It's nice to be recognized and to be representing a lot of people."

Lauterbach was selected by the State Secondary Principal Association from a list of nominees based on criteria established by the NASSP.

"Basically to be nominated, you need to be from programs well viewed by outsiders," Lauterbach said

Lauterbach began his career in education after graduating from Friends University in Wichita, Kansas with a bachelor's degree. He taught high school social studies and then became an assistant principal. When an opening became available at Southeast for principal, Lauterbach applied and was chosen to be principal in the 1964-65 school year.

"A principal is seen as a leader and the manager of the school," said Lauterbach.

He received his masters degree from Wichita State University, and his doctorite degree from the University of Northern Colorado in Greeley.

"Being around people" is what Lauterbach said he liked best about his job. "I enjoy being principal because things are always different and time passes quickly."

Pepe, he tenido mucho gusto en tenerlo en mi clase estos dos años. Es un chico muy simpático.
-Dolores Prender

No students allowed!

"Knock, knock!!"

The door slowly creaks open to reveal a dark shadowy conglomeration of human flesh.

"What do you want?" the authority figure barked

"Can I observe what actually goes on in the teacher's lounge?" I pleasantly inquired.

"No."

An aura of mystery surrounded the faculty lounge, and many teachers felt that the lounge was their only place of privacy. I tried to take in the atmosphere with a critical eye, and paint a true-to-life picture of what the lounge is actually like.

I encountered an obstacle on my journey. An unnamed vice-principal all but became physically violent as he tried to prevent two defenseless reporters from jotting down irrelevant facts concerning the lounge.

I did, however, catch a glimpse of the inner decor. There is, of course, furniture. But the extra luxuries are what really set the lounge apart from the rest of the school. Some of the many include: numerous electric coffee pots, a larger than most microwave oven, the normal, everyday pop and candy machines (cheaper, of course), and plush, rust colored wall-to-wall carpeting.

But this glimpse was seen through a cloud of smoke. Though we now know some of the physical features of this mysterious room, we have little insight as to the actual activities that take place there.

This left us with doubt as to whether or not something suspicious happened behind the scenes. Henceforth, we cannot conclude anything based upon concrete evidence as to what REALLY goes on in the faculty lounge.

Academics

Longer Days make academics better

An increased intensity toward academic achievement is the sole purpose for the initiation of longer days. Each class period gained five minutes resulting in the final bell of the day ringing about twenty minutes later than last year plus students had a shorter lunch.

A few teachers at Lincoln East High School rebelled against the new policy since they wouldn't receive an increased salary for working longer. Teachers and students at Southeast took advantage of the extra time in many different ways making better Knights the shining result.

Senior Tiffany Seevers found the longer day valuable while taking tests. "While taking my Pre-Cal tests, I find that I usually work through the last five minutes either checking my answers again or figuring out a really hard problem that I skipped over." In this respect, most students felt gratified for an extra five minutes each period.

Sometimes students felt less appreciative towards other rules that became enforced. Student Council went from room to room pulling the needs and concerns of the students from them. One major complaint voiced by students was, being forced to leave the school grounds completely if they didn't have a sixth or seventh period class.

"It gets pretty cold in the winter waiting outside for basketball practice to start. It's too bad that we can't even sit in the commons to relax and talk to our friends," said senior Deb Hoffman.

This concern was brought to Dr. Lauterbach's attention by Student Council at a November building advisory meeting.

"There are places where students can go if they don't have a sixth or seventh period class and need to stay in school. The library is open for students to go to study, and they can talk all they want in the cafeteria studyhall," Lauterbach said.

Despite the advantages and few disadvantages of longer academic days, most students were quite content with or adapted quickly to the new set rules and requirements for all schools.

School is for academics and the extra time helped to intensify our scholastic achievement.

The Knights now stand proud having used the longer days to our advantage, and shine with the winning result. A result that makes us brighter than the rest and better than before.

JUNIOR STEVE KRUSE kicks back and assumes the position of frustration during his computer programming class.

COMPOSITION CLASS REQUIRES many hours of tedious labor if one wishes to improve his writing. Chris Stasenka talks over one of his masterpieces with Mara Murphy.

JEFF CHADWICK figured out a good way to get a whole class to look at him was to simply photograph it. Joe Dappen's chemistry class, made up mostly of juniors, take a break from the lecture.

Keys to the future

Means to the real world

Some students tried to get by taking just the required minimal courses required for graduation from high school. But students also found that there are some courses that aren't necessarily required to graduate, but fulfill practical purposes for preparing for the "harsh, cold, real world."

A few of the more popular courses for practical purposes included: Drivers Education, typing, and the various computer courses offered. Each one of these classes served different purposes, but all of them offered valuable information for use in the real world.

Drivers Education was a class that was beneficial to not only the student by preparing him to be an experienced driver. There were three parts to the course. One was the actual driving. This was when the student actively faced the harsh realities of the real road, and it's potential catastrophies. But, the student first had interaction with these catastrophies through practice on the simulator.

The simulator provides a practice of "real" situations through a machine where the accidents that happen only result in a "beep" from the practice screen. The student was also able to learn of these situations through the classroom lectures also offered with Drivers Ed. Classes were taught by Gail Baum, but other teachers assisted him with the driving portion of the class.

Sometimes there was an unusual amount of excitement that went along with the driving part of the course. Sophomore Clint Johnson remembered a time when a funny happening took place while he was taking the driving part with Baum. "Mr. Baum told someone to take a U-turn on the highway, but it was illegal. The funny part is that my friend did it anyway."

Typing was another of the essential classes that many students took. Many different classes were offered depending on the level of skill one was in. The beginning course taught students the basic keyboard and worked on speed, typing reports and manuscripts.

Senior Debbie Thompson said "I took typing to help me prepare for the future, and I thought that it would be an easy way to get some credit points." The typing skills helped students prepare themselves for a computer class, as the keyboards were similar.

The courses offered in the computer science area ranged from computer literacy, to computer programming, and advanced computer programming. Computer Literacy generally dealt with learning the keyboard and the concepts behind the computer. Very little programming was taught in this course. Computer Programming and Advanced Computer Programming dealt with general commands that made the computer perform certain operations.

Dan Hohensee, who taught a course on Computer Programming said "Whereas most courses teach the student how to use the computer, programming teaches the students how to manipulate the computer."

Junior Ben Hams said he took electives such as a computer course "because our society is becoming more and more computer orientated. I feel that it is important to get a good background in these areas."

-Michelle Dyer and Perky Perry

One big joy of high school is being old enough to drive. Learning this privileged skill is done with driver's education and Bill Stephenson.

Forgetting the many hours spent in the classroom acquiring the knowledge for driving, most students are more than excited when they first get a chance to get behind the wheel.

Putting out a concentrated effort to increase their speed and accuracy, this group of prospective office personnel do their daily assignment.

Even though computers are an increasingly common sight to most students, many, like senior Bob Blumenstock and junior Bobbie Johnson, still need added assistance from a computer class.

Fine tuning

Gearing toward body tuning

Either tuning or toning was the objective of music, physical education, and car care classes. Students were able to use their talents or learn new skills to improve themselves.

Whether just getting in shape or getting requirements out of the way, physical education classes proved to be fun and needed break from "traditional" classes.

A wide variety of classes such as Aerobics, Weight-lifting, Life-saving, Team Sports, or Recreational games fulfilled student's interests. Each class was worth 2.5 credit hours and a total of 5.0 credits of P.E. were required to graduate.

A total of 12 different music classes were offered to students. There were four instrumental groups, seven vocal groups, and a music theory class second semester. New to the music department was a sophomore ensemble for girls called Knightengales.

Most of the groups are select groups and required auditions. Each group performed many times during the year at school functions, out in the community, and competitions.

"I love performing," said sophomore Lori Goin who was involved in Knight Sounds and in Band. "After a performance that goes well, you feel that all your hard work paid off."

Though no actual homework was involved in these classes, students practiced both in and outside of class to perfect their part.

For those with mechanical minds or those who were just interested in how their most used and essential possession, their car, runs, automotive classes were available.

"I knew nothing about cars, and I decided I wanted and needed to know more about them," said junior John Lydick who took Automotive Tune-up.

Classes for both beginners and students experienced in mechanics were offered.

"It saves me money. I can tune my car myself now," said Lydick.

-Paula Danekas

Adding their well-tuned voices to a group is what these sopranos are doing to make girls chorus the high quality music that it is.

Though seemingly out numbered by his opponent, junior Mike Renn exerts much effort to make a point for his team.

Keeping their bodies fine-tuned through strenuous exercises to music, these Body Toning students do some leg and thigh-slendering motions while a fellow body-toner takes her turn leading the class.

Aided by the help of a student teacher, mixed chorus is perfecting their harmonious tunes by practicing daily to attain the sound they want.

Emphasizing his point, John Kennedy explains to his class the way to care for a car. Basic car care is taken by many to spare them the expense of service stations or small repairs they could do themselves.

Tuning your body does not always have to be a tedious job. In recreational games, they join fitness with fun. The class here plays a friendly game of base-soccer.

Junior Jim Poggemeyer, while in architectural drafting class, runs his plans through a Diazo machine, which changes them into blue prints.

When Sigmund Freud constructed his theories of psychoanalysis, the odds are that he never knew Randy Willoughby would be painting this skull.

Precise measuring tools are necessary for the design of house plans. Junior Jay Greathouse uses these tools to his advantage.

The art of living

Building upon basic skills

In order to gain the most from their high school years, some students pursue interests which may or may not lead to a career. For students who knew what their career preference was, some took advantage of the courses that would help them in the future. These were the courses that specialized in an extremely specific area and allowed students to expand upon their own interests. Courses like these allowed students to develop their own personality and to mainstream their interests into one specific channel. These courses were similar to college prep classes, as they allowed students more choices for college.

Architecture, Art, Sewing, and Photography were four of the areas in which some students took to enhance their own "the art of living". Each of these areas specifically related to the interests of the person taking them.

Architecture offered three classes, each of which varied depending upon difficulty. Architecture I was the prerequisite for Architecture II, and on Senior Jeff Brown stated, "I feel that courses in specialized areas such as architecture are an invaluable asset to our educational system. Students enjoy them because they are within their range of interests, and are college preparatory. They are more likely to put more interest in an area that they enjoy."

Brown, an Architecture I, student enjoyed the freedom associated with the class. "You could work at the rate which you felt comfortable with, there wasn't a whole lot of pressure." Robert Hall, who retired at the end of first semester, had the ability to teach you what you needed to know, and he prepared his students for the college courses on architecture.

Art was another area where students could be creative. Don Byorth said that "art classes were a chance for students to individualize and express their feelings in a manner that was not alien to them. Some people found that writing was their way of expressing their innermost thoughts, but art was the same means for other people."

Sewing was not only taken by females, but also by males. This class could either prepare students for a career in the textile area, or provide a skill useful in everyday living. Sewing taught students the basic skills needed to perform the tasks that one was most likely to use.

Senior Sharon Dabbs said, "I feel that sewing is a very useful thing to learn, but I'm used to buying my clothes, not making them, so I have never taken the class and I never will."

Photography was another way that people had to express their feelings. Pictures were a means of expressing what was not said. Photographers enjoyed participating in not only something that was recognized as a hobby, but something that was a national pastime.

Classes included beginning photography, and two advanced courses. Beginning photography taught students the history of photography and the developing and printing of pictures. The advanced courses worked on picture angles, light, and special effects.

These classes weren't classified as college preparatory, but they allowed a student to decide if this was the job for them. Students tended to do somewhat better in them, because they took them out of choice and interests, not out of requirements.

Though stealing is generally illegal, sophomore Brad Brandt still musters up the courage to attempt it as Spanish teacher Pat Brown lectures.

An all-French-speaking day is designed to further the students' fluency in conversation. Here, sophomore Kathy Dawd converses with teacher Kathie Uhrmacher.

Extending their vocabulary and knowledge of the English language this vocabulary class studies diligently.

In other words. . .

It's all in how you say it

"Variety, that's the spice of life," said department chairman Kathie Uhrmacher about how she kept her French classes interesting.

A variety of language classes from French to sign language were offered, satisfying a variety of interests.

Spanish, German, French and Latin were available as before, and a new class, combining French 7-8 and French 9-10, was created by Uhrmacher. French 7-10 was "more geared to the college-type conversation and composition," she said. It was designed for people who had already learned language skills and enough French to speak "all French, all the time."

"It's been real successful," Uhrmacher said. She noted that she was pleased with the way the just French conversation had worked, and how the community projects, such as teaching elementary school students, showed people "what high school kids are really like, not just what the media tells them."

Students learned skills such as memorization, creativity, and application in language classes, Uhrmacher said, as well as "near esthetic things like art and culture that they might not get in other classes."

The smallest language class, by far, was Latin. Instead of being tutored, Traci Austin, Dick Tenhulzen, and Sarah Richardson were taught Latin as a group. "It's more interesting with more people in it," Austin said.

Aside from learning new words in a foreign language, students had the opportunity to learn new English words in Vocabulary class by studying the origin and composition of words and Greek and Latin roots and affixes.

"It's the best class to take in the whole school," junior Gary Hanna said enthusiastically. "It's something you'll actually use."

Teacher Kathy Steinke called taking Vocabulary "almost crucial" because as the depth and complexity of what a student reads increases, a broader vocabulary is necessary to understand it.

To make better use of the many words in their vocabularies, some students took Grammar. Understanding the basic structure of the language may help in writing, Steinke said.

One class that wasn't written into the course description book was Sign Language. Some students took it for an entire semester, and some opted for just one quarter.

Teacher Ellen Burton said that some students who were going to take Sign Language for just one quarter and then a gym class the next quarter had changed their plans to take more Sign Language. "They said, 'I've sacrificed my body for Sign Language!'" Burton said.

Sign Language students not only learned how to communicate with acoustically handicapped people but they were also taught "about hearing loss, deaf culture, and the implications of hearing loss," Burton said.

Whether it was in a foreign language, sign language or English, how you said it was just as important as what was said.

Once upon a time

Records, events relived

Ancient Egyptian culture, Greek civilization, the Protestant Reformation, the Renaissance, the industrial revolution, and the U.S. decision to drop the atomic bomb are only a few of the many topics that were covered each day in the various history related classes at Southeast. Possibly because certain social studies classes were required, some students may have felt hostility toward their class.

"I took American History because my mom made me," complained junior Stephanie Gray.

To the contrary, said teacher Nancy O'Brien, history is a valuable subject. "It's very important for students to understand the history of their society and culture. It gives them a better base to deal with the world today," O'Brien said.

There were four regular history classes offered at Southeast: World Studies (two semesters), Global Perspectives (one semester), Modern U.S. History (one semester), and Survey American History (two semesters). There was also another, one-semester class—Citizenship Issues—that incorporated historical ideas into a present-day context.

Five credit points from each of the three social studies categories, Global Learning, Modern U.S., and Citizenship Issues, were required for graduation.

Two courses fulfilled the Global Learning requirement, Global Perspectives and World Studies. Global Perspectives, while not strictly a history class, looked at factors from the past that influence the present-day world. The class studied geography, cultures, stages of national development, the inter-dependence of nations, and one major world problem.

"It gives the kids some exposure to ideas and criteria that they will be reading about as adults," said teacher Pat Kohl.

World Studies dealt with world history from approximately 6000 B.C. to the present. Most of the focus of the course was on western civilization, according to teacher Michael Troester.

"Western culture is the most important for us in the United States, so we concentrate on it, though we will occasionally go into other areas," Troester said.

Both Global Perspectives and World Studies tried to incorporate the same concepts and meet the same requirements, but "some colleges still want an applicant to have a western history course, which this fulfills," Troester said.

"I really enjoyed World Studies," said Gray. "The teacher can either make a history class interesting or boring and Mrs. O'Brien made it fun."

To meet the Modern U.S. requirement students could take either Modern U.S. History class or American History. Modern U.S. dealt with the 1930s to the present, while American History started with the colonial period. Mr. Ray Churchill, who taught both classes, said that American History had "the advantage of bringing a broad perspective to the course," while Modern U.S. dealt more intensively with current issues.

"I like American History because the teacher goes beyond the book, and lectures about more in depth things," junior John Dawson said.

Citizenship Issues was required for all seniors for graduation. Students studied the factors that make for responsible citizenship, the structure of government, and the process of governmental decision making.

In addition, each student was required to complete at least 20 hours of community service volunteer work.

"It is designed to provide every student with an opportunity to fulfill their citizenship responsibilities," said teacher Michael Ware.

But senior Rob Walker disagreed with the requirement, saying "It isn't volunteer work if it's required, so it defeats the purpose."

The "real" world Business world awaits

Southeast offered a variety of classes for the business minded individual

Marketing I-II dealt with retailing, wholesaling, and management. To be more specific, a student learned about the economics of the free enterprise system, advertising, career opportunities, getting a job, and other related subjects. One had to be at least a junior to take Marketing I-II, and a senior to take Marketing III-IV.

Marketing III-IV worked more with the actual running of a business. Topics discussed were management, merchandising, operations, business communications, and other basics of running a business.

A student could also take Marketing Occupations Internship I-II. That entailed maintaining employment, developing responsibility, and using marketing skills.

Business Law was a senior class that was offered. As the course title revealed, it dealt with the legalities of business—courts, contracts, bailments, wills, insurance, credit, and personal law. The course also covered commercial paper, real estate, employment, and credit.

Another class offered was Business Principals. It dealt with free enterprise, salesmanship, personnel relations, purchasing, pricing, and other related topics.

Amie Callahan, sophomore, said, "It (Business Principals) should really help me in the future."

Personal Finance seemed to be a popular class. Students taking the class learned about managing their own money. That entailed studying budgets, banking, taxes, insurance, credit, and investments.

"I liked the class," said junior Deb O'Connell. "It didn't just talk about something you didn't work with. It taught you about reality."

A student could also take Accounting I-II. Some of the subject matter was the accounting cycle, payrolls, depreciation, and computer accounting. The course helped students "to organize personal records and analyze business records," said Sue Seeman, accounting teacher. An ambitious student could take College Accounting. This class covers accounting fundamentals as studied through firms.

Southeast has a good variety of courses designed to prepare students for the real world.

—Christine Hemmer

Getting a teacher's attention is not as easy as it seems. Sandra Johnstone waits patiently for marketing teacher Carol Johnson to help her.

Not sure of an assignment, Suzie Campbell consults with personal finance teacher Rose Berdeck.

Ann Waita's college accounting class prepares for another period of learning.

Psychology teacher Tom Douglas enagoges himself in deep thought during one of his lectures. Thought is rumored to be an aspect of psychology.

Human Behavior, though often an interesting and fun class, is not free from examinations. Becky Amber and Scarlett Robinson take a test for this class.

It's all in your head

Classes become think tank

High school is quoted many times as being the time and place to "find" yourself. It's the time to find out what really makes you be you and why you do the things that you do. But many students got so wrapped up in what was going on around them, they didn't really take the time to think about themselves.

To give the students a chance to learn about themselves and others, the school offered a choice of social science classes. The classes were psychology, philosophy, relationships, and human behavior. Each student had to take at least one of these classes to meet graduation requirements.

Psychology was a class that dealt with how the mind worked and was the basics of learning about why people do what they do. Some students took the class for the requirement aspect, others for future or present interest in understanding and trying to analyze what really makes them do what they do.

"I don't know if the class has done anything for me except to make me analyze my and my friends' behavior, which may be good or bad," said junior Marcus Balters.

In philosophy, the students got a chance to learn and discuss the different philosophers and philosophies. It gave the students a chance to see how others view things and why.

"I took the class because I wanted to organize my thoughts in a logical manner and be able to decide from others' thoughts and my own, how to best achieve this," said senior Ann Badami.

"Through Human Behavior we try to develop the student potential by recognizing each one is a special, unique individual who has much to contribute," said Corene Herbster. Human behavior was a class that dealt with human emotion and how to handle those emotions in a rational way. The class also concentrated on the importance of each individual and how to meet each person's individual needs and feelings.

Junior Alice Bunge said, "I thought it sounded like an interesting class that might make me look at what I do, and others in different perspective."

Each course dealt with a different part of the human mind, but all related in that they dealt with helping each student try to become in better grasp of their own identity and individuality.

Perky Perry

Junior Sandi Koontz and senior Liza Paine help with children in a special Human Behavior "preschool".

Journalism class offers many new concepts as it prepares students for future positions on the newspaper or yearbook staffs. Taking notes on news writing, these Journalism I students learn the basics.

Straightening out some last minute Clarion problems, Mimi Lambert and Amy Defran recount the lines of a feature story in order to fit it into the page layout properly.

"Here, it's for you," says Clarion staff member Doug Curry after answering the phone in the journalism room. Telephoning businesses to sell advertisements is an important part of financing a newspaper.

Many hours outside of class are spent finishing things for important deadlines. Shield editor Julia Sellmyer stays well into the evening to carefully reexamine some layouts.

Clarion layout editor Tina Helgren does her best to work while being attacked with questions by her editor, and scissors by her photographer.

Extra! Extra! Knight-line spells it out

"I don't know of another single other class where you can learn more about your school and still get credit," said Dianne Kuppig, journalism teacher and adviser. "Journalism by its very nature allows students to seek out and explore new experiences. It also teaches management of time against quality."

When pursuing a position on either the Clarion or Shield staffs, except for a photographer position, a student must first take a course known as Journalism 1. This course gives a broad description of the main thing needed to produce a paper or a yearbook.

The students are required to learn the fundamentals of writing, write their own stories and make layouts. The class also produced a newspaper, the J-1 Clarion, by themselves.

The Shield staff consisted of 19 people, each serving a different purpose. The co-editors, Shelly Altgilbers and Julia Sellmyer, held the top positions on staff, and were in charge of the overall results and decisions. The copy staff wrote and edited all the stories. The pictures were taken by the photography staff, and the layout staff produced the pages in the book using the copy and the pictures.

The Clarion is similar in the jobs that are required to be filled. The Clarion staff is broken down into smaller, less broad sub-groups. There was a specific editor for each type of story featured in the paper. For each one of the positions, there were 19 selected students to fill them.

Both the Shield and Clarion staffs had to deal with deadlines (a specific date for the work to be done). Usually a paper came out every three weeks.

"Deadlines are really important and are not met often, so this requires us to do double amount of work at times," said junior writer Madeleine Craig.

Students that have chosen these elective classes all chose them for various reasons. Some found an interest in being involved, learning to enhance skills in certain areas, and some found that their future pursuit may lie in one of these areas.

"It's giving me needed experience in the journalism field that could be invaluable to a career in journalism or in any other field. It gives me the chance to develop many different areas," said junior writer Tim Siedell.

Because of each job being accomplished and students working together, both the Clarion and Shield have received impressive awards. The 1985-86 Clarion received the top All-American and medalist awards in national contests, and was first class in the state. The 1985 Shield also won top state and national awards. —Perky Perry

A.P. classes test students

Advanced placement and college level courses allowed students to do college level work and possibly earn college credit while still in high school.

"I wanted to try something that sounded harder," said senior Steve Halvorson about why he chose to take college accounting. "I learned a lot from it," he added.

"I hope that they'll feel that they've been in a challenging and intellectual community," said Advanced Placement English teacher Kerstin VanDervoort about what she hoped students got out of her class.

VanDervoort felt that advanced placement classes should be small because of, "limitations of time on paper grading." She added that she wouldn't want more students to take her class unless she could teach four or five sections of it.

"Interested in learning, self starters, and highly creative," was the way VanDervoort described most students who took an advanced placement class. "I wanted a challenge more or less," said Halvorson.

Many students think there should be more of a chance to take advanced placement classes as well as a bigger variety of classes to choose from.

"I would like to see more A.P. classes offered," said senior Sarah Richardson. She said she would like to see classes in world history and citizenship issues while Halvorson would like to see more classes in the arts, both spoken and written. "It would be nice," said VanDervoort about having more advanced placement classes.

According to which college a student chose to attend, they could receive a certain amount of credit after taking an advanced placement test. Other colleges, such as the University of Nebraska, Nebraska Wesleyan, and Kearney State College would give a student credit if they took the next higher course on campus and passed it with a 'C' or better, according to Advanced Placement Calculus teacher Leonard Nickerson.

Students looking toward the future and college credit and wanting a challenge while in high school could be found doing things most other students wouldn't.

In Advanced Placement English, for example, students were required to read classic books and then write papers on them. "I wouldn't have read the books on my own," said Richardson.

Whether a student took an advanced class in math, English, or history, the work was meaningful for them.

-Carol Yost

A way to increase one's knowledge of a topic is to learn to teach it. Ted Larsen allows each of his Advanced Placement History students the chance to teach the class about a topic of their choice.

A complete understanding of the theories or concepts of chemistry could not be had without a few well-planned, occasionally dangerous, labs. AP Chemistry teacher Joe Dappen prepares his class for one such lab.

Kersten Vandervoort's AP English Literature class holds a discussion about their current novel under study

A method of learning used in Kathy Steinke's AP Composition class was group discussion.

Any good math teacher knows that a lot of quizzes and tests are necessary if students are to learn the material well. George Essele passes out one of his exceptional teaching instruments.

Prove it!

Logic used in math, science

$F(x,y) = 0$, $n!$, x' , $e = 2.71828$, $\sin(0) = 0$, and $\cos(0) = 1$ are all formulas, symbols, and numbers which gave students taking math and science classes something to be confused about.

To graduate a student must have ten credits in both math and science, but many students chose to take more of these classes because of college requirements.

"They say you should take three years of science to prepare you for college," said senior Stephanie Buckwalter. This was her reason for taking physics.

Math teacher Karen Ward thought more math classes should be required "because the majority of Southeast students are college bound." She said the way things are set up now, a student does not have to take math during their junior and senior years and they could have a "real hard time" once they get to college.

Some students who were college bound still didn't take more than the requirements specified.

"I'm going to go into music or art," said sophomore Chris Ellenwood, "so it's doubtful that I'll take more." Ellenwood was a student in Judy Bogle's Algebra 3-4 class.

Math classes usually consisted of memorizing theorems, the theorems behind them, and how to use them. Ward saw this as unfortunate. She said one of math's main values was that of problem solving skills, and that math teachers as a whole, were not doing a good job of teaching this as they could be doing.

Ward also said that math exercises brain matter and teaches frustration.

While math classes involved teaching theorems and problem solving skills, science classes involved a lot of experiments.

Senior Sharilyn Kerns said her chemistry class followed the pattern of taking notes, doing labs, and then taking tests. Buckwalter said physics was about the same except at times the teacher would do experiments and the students would just watch.

"Watching experiments and learning about different things" were Buckwalter's favorite part of physics.

Whatever level of math or science a student was taking most agreed that the long assignments and tests were their least favorite part of the class.

Ellenwood said the classes were all right, but "it's fun when you ace tests."

-Carol Yost

Award winning teacher Karen Ward keeps most of the class busy by explaining an example for an upcoming assignment.

"Now does everyone understand that?" Students of Leonard Nickerson will recognize that statement as being common in his daily lectures.

Physics teacher John Kastl shows his class how physics and a big gun can be useful in hunting down sophomores.

Get your act together

Expressing through scripts

Expressing themselves was a common goal for students enrolled in drama, speech, and debate classes. In these classes, students learned the importance of communication and speaking in front of groups.

Performing in front of others took talent and also some kind of training. Beginning and Advanced Drama classes were available to students interested in the theater.

It's fun, and it gives you a chance to perform in front of peers," said senior Angie Cartwright. "It also prepares you to perform in front of a real audience."

Students spent their classtime doing improvisations and memorizing scenes from various types of theater from comedy to Shakespeare.

Drama helps your speaking techniques. It's also easier to talk in front of groups," Cartwright said.

Speech and debate classes were also offered to students wishing to learn or to improve their verbal skills. The communication requirement could be fulfilled by taking these classes also.

Speech and debate classes involved using communication skills in a competitive way. Students learned how to compete using their speaking skills either in presenting speeches or debating with others on a certain subject.

Debate is fun for people who like to think and argue and who would like to learn to argue well," said speech teacher Melissa Beall.

Classtime was spent time preparing research, practicing one's speech for a tournament, or exchanging new ideas on arguments on debate rounds.

"I took the class because it would help me when I go into law," said senior Evelyn Becker.

In speech competition, there were eight different events students could participate in. Anything "from making things up on the spur of the moment (impromptu) to memorizing literature and bring it to life for the audience" was all part of speech competition according to Beall.

There were two branches in debate—Lincoln-Douglas debate and Policy debate. Lincoln-Douglas debate was based upon values, and students took a stand to defend their opinions on various given topics.

Policy debate was based on issues that were in Congress (or that could be in Congress.) One topic is decided on each year, and all policy debaters in the United States use this subject. The issue this year dealt with the quality of water in the U.S.

"The hardest part is probably doing the initial research to get the arguments prepared," said Becker.

"Debate deserves as much attention as sports because although athletics is important for improving the mind and character, speech and debate is equally important for improving the mind," said senior Rob McIntarfer, president of the Forensics Club.

Problem is National Acid Precipitation Effects on Ecological Systems
D'Itri, 1992, p. 9

Lakes and streams in other regions of the United States and Canada also are vulnerable to stress by acid precipitation. These regions include northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan; parts of southern Appalachia and Florida, and large parts of Washington, Oregon, California, and Idaho, and parts of the Canadian Maritime Provinces.

Eight speeches are given in each debate round. Most of these must be partially prepared before the round starts. Sophomore Ben Simmons reads a prepared speech in a practice round.

Believe it or not, talking is one of the most important parts of writing a speech. Talking to others gives these debate students an added insight for their speeches.

Students are required to do about five hundred debate cards each year, and some do as many as a thousand. Anywhere from one to as many as three hundred may be used in a typical debate round.

Some people put their stomachs on hold and chase their studies over the consumption of food.

For those who are either sophomores, carless, or moneyless, the cafeteria provides a well balanced nutritional meal from the four food groups for only $1.05 for a Type A lunch.

Learning about the nutritional factors of cooking is as important as actually getting into the kitchen. Here the Home Ec. class listens to Corine Herbster explain nutrition.

Many decisions are involved with lunch. Whether to go out or stay at school, where to go if you go out, and finally, what to order.

Food for thought

Cook up a good budget

Food is one of the most vital things to each human's existence. It can be consumed in large or small quantities. It comes in many different colors, shapes, and sizes.

Learning how to prepare this food is the main purpose of the Food and Nutrition I and II classes. Both classes were taught by Corine Herbster.

In the class, students received a basis for planning and cooking their meals, information on safety and sanitation, and budgeting.

"Nutrition for teenagers" was what Herbster thought was of high value to the students. The students learned the various substitutes for "junk-food snacks" as well as the importance of fruits and vegetables.

The students also had a chance to cook a full meal using the four basic food groups. After experimenting with different foods through the semester, the students got a chance to feast upon a holiday meal with all of the trimmings around Thanksgiving time.

"The Thanksgiving meal was my favorite to fix and to eat," said senior Lisa Miller. She also enjoyed learning the techniques of grilling.

To be able to make the foods one wanted, a person had to be able to afford them. Budgeting was another topic stressed in the class.

Herbster said students in the class second semester used grocery stores as a classroom much of the time. Students compared prices, brands, and sizes of the same products to see which was the most economical.

"I would encourage people to take foods class, because it teaches you how to use a budget if you move out of the house," said Miller.

Budgeting was also a problem when it came to lunch. Options open to students were many. These included the cafeteria, bringing something from home, not eating, going home, or resorting to one of the many fast food places around the school.

Fast food was the most expensive of the choices but also the most desirable by students. "It's more fun to go out," said sophomore Neal Perkins.

Money for lunch came from many different sources. Two of the most commonly used were parents and jobs. "I pay for lunch out of my money that I earn," junior Pat Morrow said.

Going out for lunch provided students with a break from the monotonous schedule of the school day. Senior Mike Miller said, "My friends and I can get away from school and not have to worry about people listening to everything we say."

Home work to go

Studies knock nightly

For some students, school didn't end with the final bell at 2:35 or 3:35, but went on into the night. This was mainly due to homework that was given by most teachers.

Some classes didn't involve much homework, but the majority of classes were structured, and homework was imperative.

"I definitely believe in homework," said math teacher Leonard Nickerson. "The way time is structured, you don't have time in class to get all the work done." Nickerson's homework policy was to check homework everyday, and if someone didn't do his homework, one percentage grade was subtracted from the student's grade.

Many students found different ways to get this required work out of the way.

Study halls were a method used by many to complete homework. "I don't have any homework to take home because I do it all in study hall," said sophomore Keith Richter.

Because of new school policy, study halls were mandatory to attend if they appeared on a student's schedule.

Attendance was taken everyday, and students were expected to treat it as a normal class. There was a sign-in and sign-out sheet that students had to use if they went out of the cafeteria. Passes were also needed, but no passes to one's locker were given.

Not all students took advantage of the study time though. Some could be found writing notes, listening to music, or sitting and wasting time.

"I just sit and sleep," said sophomore Matt Bouwens who requested a study hall.

Others had a study hall given to them not by their own choice. Biel dropped a class, and it was too late to start another.

Another way to complete homework was with the help of a tutor. Tutors could be either friends just helping other friends with an assignment or college students looking for extra money.

Junior Jenny Sartori was a tutor in math. She got paid for tutoring because her parents thought she would take it more seriously if she was being paid.

"I thought it was a good experience," said Sartori. She said she would do it again if somebody asked her to and she had the time.

Sartori thought tutors were a good idea. She added that a lot of people have more trouble than they are willing to admit so there aren't too many tutors around.

For those who chose to do their homework, a lot of effort and determination was put into it (most of the time). This sometimes resulted in a very late night with the lights going out at 1:30 A.M. and students appearing sleepily at school the next morning.

-Carol Yost and Paula Danekas

Whether a student excels at a subject or needs a little extra help, tutoring is a good way to help a student get to the proper level. Seniors Todd Splain and Adam Brady get that special attention.

Working on homework every chance one gets is a popular action taken by many Southeast students. Here Pep Club president Amy Castro works before a pep rally.

When unable to do homework in the cafeteria during study hall for fear of talking, the wise course to take is to go to the library. Here one can be insured of a quiet study hour.

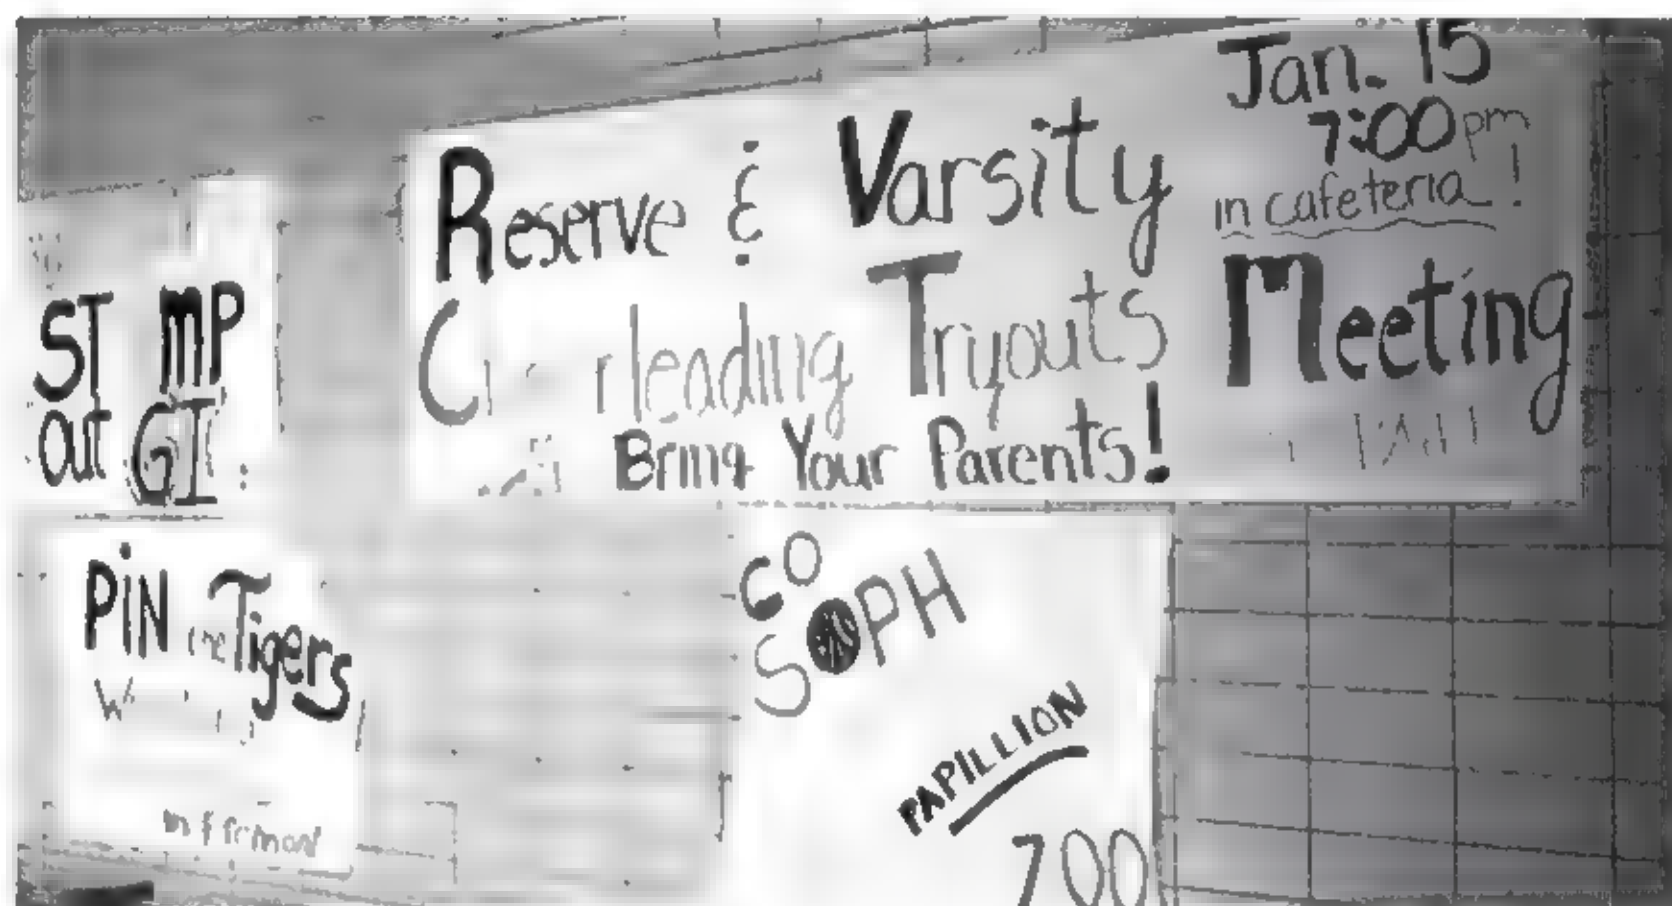

Early morning cram sessions is another possible way of getting the day's assignment done. Morning people can do now what they didn't do the night before.

Many sign like these appeared throughout halls supporting teams and announcing meetings for clubs.

News in unusual forms

You walk into the bathroom stand in front of the mirror, and the writing on the ledge in front of you catches your eye. "Susanna loves Trevor" or "For a good time call 423-xxxx." These were familiar phrases that have been seen around the halls, walls, and bathrooms of Southeast High School, or any school from now until eternity.

Senior Sherry Biel said that "reading the bathroom doors and walls gives you some idea as to who hates who, who is in love with who and certain other unmentionable things."

Another interesting item that kept life at school from being too dull, was the appearance of a variety of signs around the school. These signs did include the ones wishing friends a happy birthday, good on a game, or the famous cheerleading signs wishing every team ever heard of "good luck".

Some other hallway decorations include the announcements of "last chance to buy a yearbook," or "today is the last day to enter in the Canon Classic."

Biel said she thinks that these signs provide color to hallways besides "providing spirit, information, and giving the pep club something to do." While some students don't even notice the signs, or wouldn't know if they disappeared, others did. To the athletes, and those others who were recognized, the signs could play an important role in their lives. The signs placed on the lockers during spirit week recognized the athletes and gave the pep clubbers a chance to dare on their favorite male or female.

BEEP.. BEEP. BEEP...Mumble moreble blamerskan morblays enoncjerents. The administrators were in charge of the announcements. If no one listened to them then no one would order a yearbook, or order their caps and gowns, or would have received their graduation announcements.

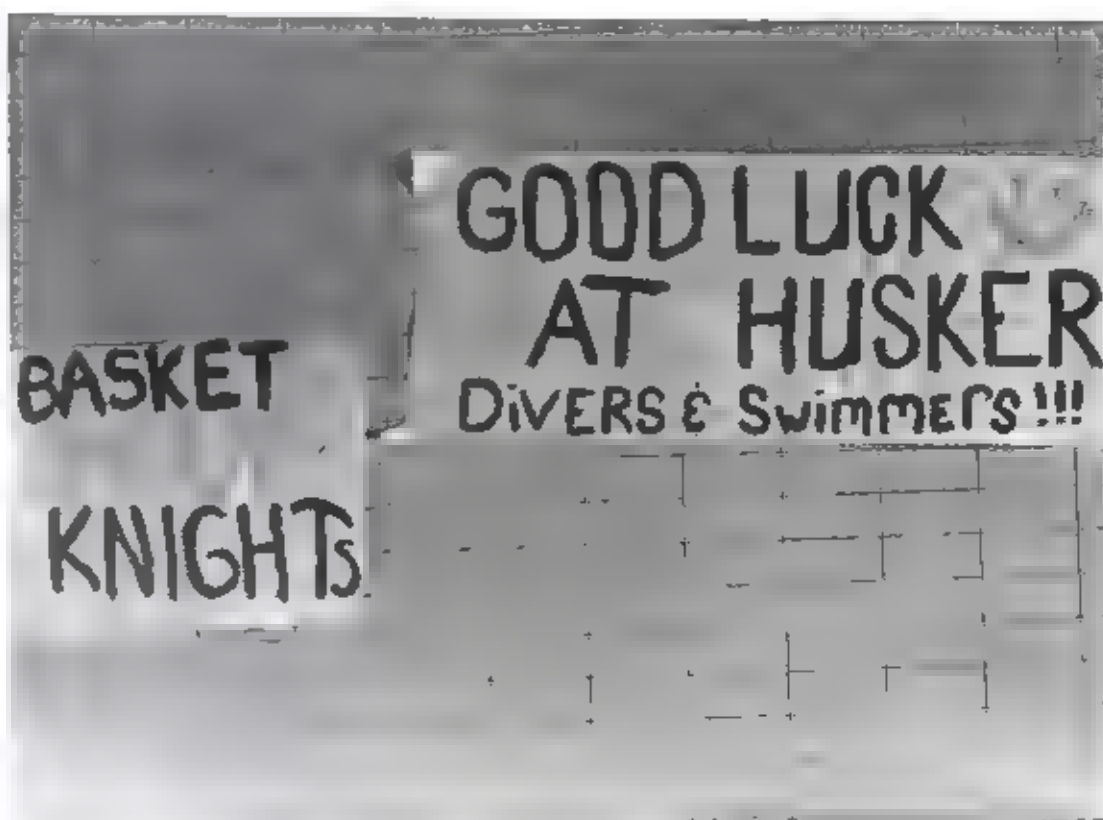

As students all knew these were all useful ways of informing us, the faculty, and anyone else who happened to be walking through the school at the moment of very important events, people, happenings, and of everyone's love and hate life. These were all a part of high school, and will make for wonderful memories in the years to come.

-Michelle Dyer

Signs supporting the swim team and the basketball team appeared in the front hall.

On some people's birthday, their friends made signs like this one made for junior John Dawson on his 17th birthday.

Pep signs are made to be creative by the pep clubbers to attract the attention of passers by.

Clubs

Better Knights were result of club involvement

The Drama Club Dance Decorations Committee meets 3:40 p.m. in room 214. If you signed up to make decorations for the toga dance, please remember to meet outside to prepare for the dance.

This announcement and many others like it were heard by students every day of the intercoms. Not everyone paid attention to all of them. French Club members may not have cared when the next Spanish Club event was. But they could have. There was no limit on the numbers of clubs a student could belong to, and belonging to three or four clubs was not an out-of-the-ordinary happening.

Clubs were as much a part of education as classes were. Business, foreign languages, sports, and math were just a few areas that clubs were associated with. Cheerleading, red cross, and music were also on the seemingly never ending list.

New to the club collection was the G.Q. Club and Future Problem solving.

"Future Problem Solving is a club where students are given a futuristic situation where they must find problems and solve them. World hunger is an example of a subject that we've worked on," said president Bill Griffin.

Why join a club? Some felt that the long days spent at school were enough for them, and wanted no more to do with it. But many more felt that clubs definitely had something worthwhile to offer.

"I like belonging to Soccer Club because I get to meet new people and play varsity level soccer even though it's not a varsity sport at this school. It helps you with social skills and working with a team," said senior Todd Schwendiman.

French Club because I thought it sounded fun," said sophomore Steve Christensen.

Even though time spent at school was increased, there was no lack of stamina to carry on with all of the organizations there were offered. The Knights were full of life from the early morning on into the night.

120/Clubs Divider

SCHOOL SPIRIT is the element which Pep Club revolves around. Here the "go-team-go" pep clubbers relax after a harrowing pep session at the girls varsity basketball game against Kearney. The Knights were cheered on to an overwhelming victory.

AFTER SPENDING many strenuous hours memorizing lines and practicing their parts, Kyle Dyas and Martha Lauber perform in a dress rehearsal for the drama club's Annual Back Stage Night.

THE FRENCH CLUB has an annual Bouillabaisse party at a member's house. Sophomore Christine Hemmer and juniors Carrie Richardson and Carrie Whitehead wait for the stew.

AN ELITE GROUP of individuals get together three days a week to eat lunch and discuss school related politics. This group is often called the Student Council.

EACH YEAR the Southeast Sports Booster Club has a fund raising chili feed. Students and their parents spend an evening conversing with friends, eating chili, and supporting various athletic teams.

Longer Days make activity in sports a relief

When driving by Southeast at 6 a.m., as well as 9 or 10 p.m., an empty parking lot was seldom to be seen. The school did not shut down at the command of the last bell. Although classes were not in session at these extreme hours of the day, the school was inhabited by athletes.

Most of these hours were taken up by practices. Swim team participants took their morning dips as early as 5:30 a.m. during the season. "I hated getting up that early, but it was worth it in the end. Some mornings when my alarm went off, I'd put my pillow over my head and choose sleep over strenuous exercise," said senior Brett Moses.

Practicing as diligently as the Knights did is what led them to their success. No matter what sport, the players all strived to do their best. Practicing, as well as optimistic attitudes helped them to do this.

"A positive attitude really helps. If you think that you're better than everyone else, you don't have to worry as much about your performance," said senior Troy Kanter.

"I get emotional satisfaction from pushing myself beyond normal human limits. I enjoy straining to achieve goals that sometimes seem unachievable," said junior Ben Harris. "Although the pain levels are sometimes unbearable, the common team goal drives us to overcome all obstacles," he said.

Not every game was won. But losing score-wise did not necessarily mean that nothing was gained. The athletes used what they learned losing a particular game, meet, or match; and used to help them win the next.

The extra time spent in classes did not detract from the students' performances during competition. The Knights accepted the challenge, and went on to meet their goals.

MUCH CONCENTRATION is necessary to do a walkover on a piece of wood that's less than six inches wide. It can be done, however, as this Southeast gymnast demonstrates.

NO MATTER what the sport, strong team spirit is a crucial element in the execution of a successful season. Senior Chad Tolly and sophomore Justin Moore display good sportsmanship with a full on "high-five".

THOUGH NOT physically on the court, mental participation in the game kept the players involved and more capable when their time to perform came. Here the mental participants of the varsity team check out the action.

Varsity Tennis Lettermen ace season

Depth and experience were the key words to a successful season for the boys' varsity tennis team.

"We had a lot of depth and a lot of good players," said senior player Chad Tolly. "We didn't have any extremely good players—we're all pretty much even play-wise."

With a state title in mind, the team traveled to Dewey Park in Omaha Oct. 17 and 18, and came six points close to the state title which went to Omaha Central. The team finished second in the competition, and players Scott Garnet and Scott Neumeister won the title in #2 doubles.

The team ended up the season with a 9-0 record losing only three matches in the last dual meet of the season.

because we didn't lose a single match at the first eight duals," said George Eisele, coach of the team. "We've never had that record before."

In addition to their successful record, the team came in third in the Papillion Invitational, won the LPS and the Fremont Invitational, and also came in first at the Greater Nebraska Conference tennis meet.

"It was an overall team effort. Everybody played well, and we only lost one match against tougher competition," said Tolly about the Nebraska Conference.

The team practiced three or four times a week for about one hour during the good weather. These practices consisted of drills, isolated practice on certain strokes, and match play Challenge matches were also an important part of team practices. To gain positions on the team, players competed against each other, and the winning person or doubles team moved ahead of the other. These matches were important because of the six people limit in tournament, only the top players could go.

"We're all friends, but there is a lot of competition between us," senior Don Everett

"State was disappointing," stated Eisele, "but we should be pleased with second. The team put forth a lot of effort and worked together as a group, and they should be congratulated."

The reserve team also had a perfect season. The team dual record was 9-1, and they were city champs

Girls' Golf Young talent aids team

Youth and consistency were terms often used when discussing the girls' golf team. The team took advantage of being able to have freshmen on the team. Ninth grader Angie Wilson from Irving played a vital role in the success of the team.

Consistency was the goal of the team. "At the start of the season we wanted to finish in the top three at every meet," said head coach Dan Wolf. The team met this goal except for the Duschen Invitational which was held in Omaha. The team finished fourth but Wilson won medalist honors.

As the season progressed the goal switched to winning state. Senior Erleen Hatfield said the team didn't feel any pressure to win state but "they really wanted to."

Seven strokes stood between the team and their goal as they placed second to Omaha Marion. Once again Wilson took medalist honors. "It was my goal," said Wilson about medalist honors, "so I really wasn't shocked."

The weather during the season was a factor. "This is the worst weather since I've been coaching," Wolf said. The first meet was the only good one because it was warm Wilson said.

Oct. 17 was to have been the day of the state meet. Due to rain it was postponed to the following day. The meet was held in Lincoln at Mahoney Golf Course.

Even if the weather was a problem, team spirit wasn't. "Everyone helped each other and gave each other a lot of support," Hatfield said. The team also had a lot of fun during the season, she added.

Although the season was played under gray skies, the season itself was a bright one.

Cross Country Tradition of Excellence

"In order to be successful at Cross Country, you must have what I call the four T's—talent, training, training, and training," said Cross Country coach Ted Larson, emphasizing the importance that training has upon one's ability to do well on the team.

The cross country team officially started practicing in August but once the school year began they practiced daily except Sunday for two to three hours.

The teams once again started the season with a bang. Win after win was produced by both teams as they once again strived to be the best.

"Everyone's pretty much unified, we get along well, and everyone teases each other for comical relief. Most teammates have a nickname. They call Greg Reentz "Woodstock", because his hair looks like feathers," said senior Greg Wiley whose nickname on the team was "Clint".

Many factors are taken into consideration when analyzing the win which a team produces. "The girls' team needed to know that they could win and to feel confident with their own running. The boys needed to pull together as a team and get unified. They knew all along that they were going to win state, not out of cockiness, out of confidence in their ability," said Larson. The greatest setback that any team can have is injuries and the teams' injuries were kept to a minimum throughout the season.

The assistant coach this year was John McCracken. McCracken felt that another advantage that the S.E. team had was the encouragement given to them. "Their parents, the faculty, and the kids in general in the social aspect, they are well-adjusted, well-rounded kids that have grown up well. They have a real direction in life, with long and short term goals, which I feel directly parallels success."

Sophomore Nate Nielsen concentrates on the terrain while running at the Nebraska Wesleyan Invite. Nielsen was second in the state meet.

Michelle Geislinger, followed closely by Michelle O'Mara, passes a Fremont runner en route to a strong finish at the state meet.

Junior Jay Greathouse aids the team in their victory at the Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational. Greathouse had a successful season, and finished 12th at state.

Finishing strong in a meet at East High School is Doug Cowling. The boys team went on to win state just weeks later.

Cross Country runners when starting a race, can already visualize the finish line and running across it in their minds.

A pair of Southeast runners leads a pack of girls in the state meet in Keamey.

Trailing close behind a Millard runner is sophomore Jody Steinman. Her perseverance and dedication allow her to keep pace.

Cross Country Endurance pays off

Larson said that senior captains Hayley Malcom and Karen Kluth provided the girls' team with excellent leadership and that the real leader on the boys team was senior John Early. "He's a very positive person. I like to surround myself with positive people to get the ball rolling in the right direction."

"I really don't think that I've had any major personal accomplishments. If one person suffers, the whole team suffers, if one person feels the glory, the whole team feels it

In cross country, people learn to value the team over themselves," said senior captain Hayley Malcom.

Larson agreed that cross country was a "feeling". Running seemed to give those that run a feeling that is indescribable by those that don't. It is often known as a "runner's high".

It's this feeling that made the pains of running into a feeling of euphoria for the cross country teams as the once again they had successful seasons.

McCracken felt that coaching helped him personally. "If I could give them one-half of what they give me, I'd be happy, they give me a boost." Larson felt that McCracken, being an Olympic class runner, has helped the teams a lot in continuing the winning tradition.

"Southeast has a tradition of Cross Country excellence. Every year we're right there at the top-if not #1. They have faith in themselves, their coaches, and their ability."

-Michelle Dyer

The high bar allows Brian Wrightman to do a giant swing.

This complicated stunt, of a high-superior rating, is carried out by junior Shannon Toolson at the Trans-Nebraska meet. Stunts are rated based upon difficulty and execution of the movement.

Scissors, a pommel horse movement, is executed by junior Jared Nun. Nun's abilities were recognized in a national magazine.

Performing splits on the beam is senior Dawn Everett.

Gymnastics Strong spirit is strength

"A good mental feeling—everyone feels good about each other, but we are lacking some on the physical side because we are young and inexperienced," said senior captain of the gymnastics boys' team Brian Wrightsman.

"I feel that the reason for our success was hard work, positive team mates and the coaches pushing you," said Dawn Everett, senior captain of the girls' gymnastics team.

The hard work began Aug. 17 with some practices that consisted of stretching, tumbling and the rest of practice was spent inventing or improving routines.

"I really enjoy being able to make up our own routines. It lets me be creative and makes the routines less tedious," said junior captain Shannon Toolson.

Positive teammates were also a great asset to the gymnastics team's success. "The captains this year are good role models and keep the team's spirit going," said coach Ron Paulson.

The captains led the stretches, helped with routines and tried to keep a positive attitude throughout the team. "It was great honor being chosen as captain, and was a good way to get to know others on the team better," said junior captain Jared Nun.

The support from parents and the student body was helpful in keeping the team's moral high. "The school spirit really helped because their support made us keep going when we were feeling down," Everett said.

Feeling down wasn't what the girls' team felt when they scored 130 at Millard North Invite. "Our goal for the season was to hit 130, but after we hit it, we made a new goal to score higher," said Toolson. The team was able to achieve this goal because of their consistent floor routine.

The boys' team had a victory over East in a dual meet. "We were really happy to win because it showed that hard work and determination pays off," said Wrightsman.

"The reason we weren't able to have a better record this year is because we lacked in depth and concentration," said Kristen Flanders.

Team meets main goal

Depth was a problem for both teams this year. "If someone gets sick, there only is a few to back them up," said Nun.

"Coaches are honest and always have a positive attitude," said Everett. This seemed to help the team a lot when they were down. "Kristen (Flanders) has the best positive attitude. She made the atmosphere good," said Everett.

The high spirit, good atmosphere, and individual talents seemed to be the keys to this year's success. "All in all it was a great team with talent and high spirit," said Toolson.

The determination of both teams paid off with the

hoped for in districts," said Toolson.

Individual talent was also displayed at districts with nine girls and seven boys qualifying for state.

"Our team goal was just to make it. After we did we just decided to have a good time at the meet," said Nun.

Kelly Hoppe and Jared Nun proceeded to the state finals with respective placing. "Finals was a more relaxing competition, having only four events and I was pleased on how it ended up," said Nun.

Varsity Volleyball Players have spirit

"Communication is the key element holding a team together, it is what produces wins," said junior Kan Kussatz. Kussatz is a member of both the reserve and varsity volleyball teams. This year's varsity team consisted of 12 girls, six of which were juniors, one sophomore, and five seniors. Team members were chosen by their skills, how well they worked with other people, how coachable they were, and overall sportsability. Only three varsity letter winners returned from last year. The team was young and basically inexperienced, said senior captain Deb Hoffman.

Although the season was a disappointing one, the team felt as if it was a time for learning also. "Everyone got along on and off the court, and there was a strong sense of team unity. Every time we went out on the court, we knew that win or lose, it wasn't because of one or two individuals, it was a team effort," said Hoffman. "We wanted to win so we worked hard together," said Kussatz.

Hoffman, as captain, was in charge of the team's morale. "I was expected to give the team a mental boost when I went into the game, but sometimes it didn't work. It's hard to come from the bench and be right in the mainstream of the game."

The team had a variety of unified goals, and each person had her own idea of what she wanted to get out of the season. The team goals, according to Hoffman, included playing as a team, having a winning season, and making it to state. "My personal goals included the team's goals, and I also wanted the team to work well together on the court," said Hoffman. Kussatz added that one of her personal goals was "...for everyone to try to work more as a team, not as an individual."

Although all of the goals may not have been accomplished, the team members developed a sense of unity, and improved upon the mental aspect of their game.

Sophomore/Reserve volleyball Unity is key to success

"We work well together and when working well together we can beat any team, even if they have better skills," said junior Rory Barrett.

"The reasons for our success this year was hard practices, team unity and support from coaches and parents," said sophomore Susan Brown.

The "hard practices" began in mid-August, lasting two to three hours a day. Practices dealt with conditioning, team work, and scrimmaging.

"All other teams wanted to be like us. They want the team unity and fun," said reserve coach Marsha Gotchall.

Team unity was also the key factor of the sophomore team. The sophomores had a little sister program which is where an anonymous member of the team is another teammate's spirit girl for the season. "The little sisters helped a lot in keeping the team's spirits high," said sophomore coach Cindy Renn.

Another factor in keeping the team's spirits high were the coaches. This year was Gotchall's first year coaching at Southeast. "I really liked coaching because I'm able to retain and pass on one coaching philosophy, which is attitude and not only the importance to win," said Gotchall.

Gotchall philosophy made a big difference with the team's performances. "She is the best. She makes everyone feel important and feels that having a good team is what is most important," said Barrett.

The parents and student body also made the teams feel important. "At our home meets the support was okay, but we really need the student body to take more of an interest," said sophomore Monica McGuire.

The main reason for this was because there were only three home games. "We hope that in the future the support will be greater. Southeast has an excellent volleyball program and should be commended," Gotchall said.

"Working together, a sense of fun, and beginning to master fundamentals was the basis for our team's all around success," said Brown about the season.

Varsity Football

Better than expected

Finishing the season with a record of 7-3 and making it to the state playoffs for the second year in a row, the varsity football team passed the expectations of many people.

"Play as a team, win as a team, lose as a team," was the philosophy of the team. This philosophy and a goal to improve play each week got the Knights off to a 4-0 start.

The team started their season as the only Lincoln team not rated in the top ten and worked their way up to number three before the first loss of the season against Lincoln High.

"We pretty much knew where the team stood at the beginning of the season and the team did better than people thought they would," said head coach Chuck Mizerski. "It didn't bother us any that we weren't rated."

added linebacker Randy Goldenstein.

No particular game stood out in the players' minds as being the most difficult. "All games are tough in their own way because each team has different strengths," said senior Mike Cotter. "The first game was the easiest because we won by such a wide margin," senior Sam Schriener said.

The team beat intra-city rival East by a score of 17-14. "Competition is tougher in intra-city games because there is a lot of emotion involved," said Goldenstein.

The win over East and a 14-0 shutout over Northeast earned the team a share of the city championship with Lincoln High. The team was also district champions and the conference runner-up.

Entering the state playoffs the team was ranked number five and had to play number one rated and undefeated Creighton Prep in Omaha. The team lost 29-6 with Southeast's only score coming in the third quarter on a 64 yard run by senior Kory Lind.

Mental as well as physical concentration was needed to win football games. One of the strengths of this year's team, said Mizerski, was "the ability to accept a lot of hard work."

The coaching staff played a part in the success of the team. "The coaches knew us as individuals and not just football players, which was nice," said Goldenstein.

Senior Chris Cassel summed up the season this way: "We never had any doubt that we had potential. We had a couple of disappointing losses but we had a good season."

Reserve/Sophomore Football Teams gain confidence

"To become better players" was the main goal of both the sophomore and reserve teams, according to reserve head coach Doug Miller and assistant sophomore coach Dan Hohensee.

The secondary goal of the reserve team was to prepare the players for varsity play next year. Team members could be found working towards this goal at daily after school practices.

A typical practice, according to Miller, lasted about two and one-half hours, with most of the time being spent on basics. "The progress has been excellent, but I'm not surprised," said Miller.

"We put in a lot of hard work and have gotten a lot out of it," said reserve player Brad Vasa. Jason Walters felt the coaches brought out the best in the team. "They get on us if we don't work hard," Walters said.

A 23-14 victory over Fremont was the highlight of the season. "Fremont walked over us during the first half and we came back to win the game," said Vasa.

The reserves finished out the season retaining the city championship which they had won as sophomores with a victory over East.

Excitement was the key word on Oct. 17 as the sophomore team beat East in a 6-0 double-overtime win. "That was pretty much the highlight of our season," said team member Alan Pershing.

Plenty of team spirit and hard practiced helped the sophomores to finish the season with a winning record.

The team did not take city, losing out to Lincoln High.

"Practices weren't long but they were hard," said Pershing. Hohensee described a typical practice as lasting about two hours, with the team working in small groups to start with and practicing as a team at the end of practice.

Leadership was an important aspect of the game sophomores had to work on. "Some players lack confidence on the sophomore level," said Hohensee. He added that by the end of the season, some players were starting to take on the responsibility they will need as varsity players.

Seward was the last opponent for the sophomores as they ended their season on Oct. 28 away from home.

Swimming and Diving Shaved and psyched up

"We had a lot of team unity this year," said junior J.B. Barr. "We all had the same goal."

This goal, to do their best, pushed the swimmers and divers into a successful season. The boys placed third in the state, and the girls placed fifth.

This success, however, could not have been achieved without a lot of hard work. In the main part of the season, swimmers practiced from 5:30 or 6 to 7 in the morning and 4 to 6 evenings on school days, and also on Saturday mornings.

Intense practices in late December through January were known as "The Big Push" before state competition. "We worked really hard right before we tapered off and rested up for state," sophomore Steph Neid said.

Then, right before state, "workouts focused on sprinting and speed. Practices were more fun, and we got psyched," Barr said.

Divers had different ways of preparing for competitions. "You have a list of dives you have to work from," junior Laura Arth said. "You just dive your best and learn new dives."

The divers hit the pool after school and on Saturday mornings, sometimes having to share the pool with the swimmers. According to Arth, "We have great facilities and everything, but... we only get to use one board."

Swimming and Diving "The big push" pays off

Despite the restrictions on board use, the divers had impressive results. Five girls and three boys qualified for state...more than the rest of Lincoln's qualifiers put together.

Practice, though the principle cause for a successful season, was not the only cause. Team spirit and getting psyched played important roles as well.

"I think we had more team spirit this year than last," Barr said. "We did lots of cheers."

"We all shared the pain and torture of practices, so we have a lot of respect for each other," Neid said.

To give each other additional support, members made signs and gave each other cookies and flowers, Arth said.

But, by far, the most outwardly noticeable sign of psyching up was shaving down. "It really makes you feel faster," Barr said. "Everybody looks forward to it."

"I shaved my arms for the first time because everyone talked me into it," Neid said. "I think it's more a of a big deal for the guys, though...they shaved their heads, I only got a haircut."

Shaved and psyched for the 100-yard backstroke, Barr set a state record with a 52.75 time. "I was really thrilled," he said. "It was my season goal."

"We really put in a lot of hard work this year," Barr said. "Even though we didn't place as high as we set our goal, it was still a good season."

Wrestling

The year of learning

While the season record doesn't show a winning season, it also doesn't show the team unity and learning experience developed by this year's wrestling team.

Twenty-five members, the majority unexperienced, made up a team that worked hard to improve their ability to compete in dual meets.

The highlight of the dual meets this season was when junior Jason Forstorm got a reversal in the last five seconds to win by one point.

"Last year the wrestlers weren't as positive as this year. This year they turned the corner to start building a more positive atmosphere for now and the future teams," said Coach Mick Pierce.

Even in a losing season the team was able to come together and work to improve as the season progressed.

"We had a team that made the best out of the wrestlers we had and never gave up," said junior Chad Lunders.

The spirit dominated the team enabling it to have four wrestlers in the state meet.

Chad Lunders, Jeff Fushia, Tom Gifford and Roy Tucker competed in the state meet February 20-22. Chad Lunders and Tom Gifford made the semi finals on the second day of the meet.

"The state tournament gave us a chance to compete with some really outstanding wrestlers," said Lunders. "It was a good experience that makes you want to come back again next year," he added.

These members of the team that qualified for state gave the rest of the team a more optimistic attitude and that an inexperienced team can come through.

"The team improved as the year progresses. Statisticly we didn't look good but in our own minds we felt we did pretty good," said Lunders.

Varsity Boys' Basketball Team lacks experience

Despite posting a 4-15 regular season record the varsity boys' basketball team was "better than our record shows," according to team member Chad Moller.

First year Coach Dennie Puelz said, "our record is disappointing, in terms of win-loss, but not really discouraging."

In fact, in districts, Southeast upset Beatrice in the opening game and lost to Northeast in overtime in the second game by only four points. It was the second time this year the team had lost in overtime to Northeast.

With only three seniors, Rudd, Scott Detleson, and Cal Leyden on varsity, "we lacked the maturity to deal with the pressures of Class A varsity basketball," Puelz said.

"This year we had no returning players with varsity experience in a pressure situation," Puelz said. "Tim Herman and Mark Rudd played some, but not in crucial situations, so we never had enough chemistry to unite the younger kids."

Moller attributed the teams record largely to poor luck. "I don't mean for this to sound like an excuse, but we really didn't get a lot of breaks in the important places," he said.

Grant Kauffman had another reason. "It was politics, man," he said. "Seriously, we always played the other teams hard, but had a tough time pulling the switch."

This was Puelz's first year as varsity head coach, but "I've got 22 years of coaching experience, and varsity coaching is not all that different from junior varsity or sophomores," he said.

The players had nothing but praise for their new coach. Kauffman said, "He knows what he's doing, and is a real nice guy. He's got a good, positive attitude. He's an honest man and a fair man. Largely because of him, I think, we were a real close team."

"I'm just sorry that we couldn't do a little better for the seniors; they certainly deserved it," Puelz said.

Herman and John Puelz led the Knights in scoring, averaging 14 points a game apiece, according to Coach Puelz. "Next year we're going to have to have some more outside shooters, but I've got confidence that we'll do well."

-Ed Pallesen

On occasion, tall players are able to obtain a rebound or two during a game. Three Knights here ponder the consequences of such an event.

Sophomore and Reserve Boys' Basketball Teams filled with talent

Basketball talent was tapped to the limits during the season as many junior varsity players moved up to the varsity level creating spaces which were left to be filled by sophomores.

Setting goals at the beginning of the season is something most athletic teams do, but the J.V. basketball team had an interesting way of handling this concept.

Head coach J.R. Connell used a goal sheet which was made up of individual and team goals that were input by the players. The sheet included not only goals pertaining to basketball but also goals relating to characteristics such as responsibility, respect, and hard work. The last goal on the sheet was to have fun.

"When you win as much as we did you can't help but have fun," said Connell. The team finished the season at 13-3 and won the city championship.

Team spirit went along with having fun. "We had a lot of spirit," said sophomore team member Mark Bunde. Bunde credited head captain Brian Gordon for getting the team fired up.

Winning the city championship was the most memorable experience for many of the team members. The team won over all three of the other Lincoln schools and beat Lincoln High by one point to clinch the title.

The game over Lincoln High was extra special for junior team member Steve Hill. "My next door neighbor is the J.V. coach at L.H.S.-that made the victory a lot of fun."

There was a price to pay for the successful season that the team had. The cost of success was met through tough practices.

"Connell really gets on us in practice, he doesn't stand for screwing around," said Bunde.

"I was pretty demanding," said Connell, "but you can't be consistent if you don't have discipline."

The sophomore basketball team had a successful season, with a final record of 10-2. The team worked toward their goals as a team, and this unity brought them a much deserved good season.

The coach this year was Gene Thompson. Thompson teaches at Pound Junior High in the morning and then comes to Southeast for practices. "Coach Thompson was a good coach because he had experience. In practice he would bring the guts out of us when we needed it. He's make us work for hours if we didn't understand something until we got it," Jisa said. "He'd use Sesame Street sayings to help us remember what we're supposed to do, he'd make us feel stupid so we'd do it right the next time."

-Carol Yost and Michelle Dyer

Junior Jon Bruning busts for two in a big game. The game was played at the ultra-modern Prash Activities Center.

John Roper, a forward on the sophomore team, shoots a free throw against East Southeast went on to win the game by a sizable margin.

Varsity Girls' Basketball SE girls are "red hot"

The varsity girls' basketball team, consisting of seven seniors, two juniors, and three sophomores, started off an outstanding season with twelve straight victories. Their first loss was to Omaha Marion, the only other undefeated team in their class.

Sophomore Lisa Borchardt said, "It (the loss against Marion) was a great disappointment, but it was better that the loss happened before state. It helped to remove pressure from the players."

After the loss to Omaha Marion, the girls suffered only one other loss in district competition against Lincoln East.

The girls team started off the season rated in the top ten. This sparked an interest among Knight fans and resulted in a greater attendance at their games by both parents and students, according to Borchardt.

Coach John Larsen provided not only support but hard and diligent training, according to senior Deb Hoffman. "He was always trying to get us to improve ourselves, not only in the physical aspect of the game, but in the mental aspect also. His knowledge about basketball is incredible," said Hoffman.

The team's assets included excellent teamwork, and lots of talent, according to Borchardt. "Everyone knows what to expect of each other, so we get along well and cooperate on the team. It helped that everyone liked each other and was good friends."

Needing to hustle more on defense, by moving up and down the court faster, was what Hoffman said was the only major downfall for the team.

Despite this downfall, the girls' team learned to be an excellent athletic group, and practiced their 1985-86 slogan to the maximum; "Knights Are It". And they were

Their first loss was to Omaha Marion, the only other undefeated team in their class, but the Lady Knights were given a second chance on the evening of March 8, 1986. This was the final round of the 1986 Girls' State Basketball Championship and the winner of the game was to be state champions. Southeast took state with a 55-47 victory over Omaha Marion.

Coach John Larsen said, "I'm very proud and happy for the girls. They worked really hard and did an excellent job accomplishing their goals, to go to state and win. They weren't sure that they were going to take state, but they never doubted that they could to it."

-Michelle Dyer

Basking in the warm glow of victory, seniors Jill Acker and Susie Martin cut down the net after their 55-47 win over Omaha Marian at the state Tournaments at the Bob Devany Sports Complex. The varsity girls became the first team ever at Southeast to win the State Championship in basketball.

Senior varsity player Chris Jacques shoots a jumpshot from outside the key, despite the Beatrice defense, during a district game played at East.

Scoring two points against the East Spartans, Knight center Jill Acker jumps to make a shot. This provided a good first game for the girls by winning.

Varsity player Stacy Knutzen gets an inside position and baffles her opponents and team members by scoring another two points.

Sophomore and Reserve Girls' Basketball

Support found in team

"It surprised all of us how well we worked with each other," said sophomore reserve player Suzanne Schmeling.

The reserves took the city championship with a 15-1 record. The game against Omaha Marion in particular was "a really good game," according to Schmeling. "We proved to them that we've got a good team." Games against city rivals East, Lincoln High, and Northeast were always exciting, said reserve Coach Janet MacNeill.

"We didn't have any superstars," said MacNeill. "We had to work together to achieve the kind of season that we had." But the team did have a lot of quickness, as displayed by their full-court press. Steals seemed almost commonplace for the reserves.

MacNeill said she thought the season was excellent. Schmeling added "it was a really special season. We all got along good and learned from each other, and our coach Janet (MacNeill) can take the credit for that."

Both teams practiced after school for about 90 minutes and sometimes practiced on Saturdays. A typical practice included going through plays, scrimmaging, working on defense, running, and free throw shooting.

The sophomore team finished with a 3-8 record. Sophomore coach Tim Golden said, "The record's not near as indicative of how well they did because in five of the eight games we lost we shot under 20 percent at the (free-throw) line and the other teams shot over 80 percent."

"We all worked together," sophomore player Monica Maguire commented. "If we wanted to do our best, we would. If we didn't, it would show."

Tight games were nothing new to the sophomores. Five of the games they played in were decided by five points or less. In the last game against Lincoln High the Links launched a last second shot that made the score 23-22 in favor of Lincoln High. The most resounding win the sophomores had was over Northeast by a score of 27-20.

"I was really proud of the way they hung in there," Golden added. "They really improved and worked hard"

-Christine Hemmer

Free throw shooting takes a lot of concentration and effort. Sophomore reserve player Amy Elmore prepared for her shot.

Monica Maguire blocks a shot in a game against Northeast. The sophomore Knights were able to win the game by seven points over their intra-city rival.

Timeouts provide important breaks for basketball teams. They are often used when teams are tired or get behind and need some strategy help.

Businesses

Better Knights used business advantageously

Students have many different ways of getting money. Some work for it, others have it saved up from the day they were born, while others just get it from their parents or other relations. But, no matter how students get their money, most spend at least some of it sometime, and Lincoln's businesses benefit from it.

With all this wealth among students comes an added responsibility as they decide what they need to spend money on. For the first time, most students find the need to draw up and maintain a budget. A few of the most popular items included in the budget were gas money for their car, savings for future plans, money for entertainment, clothes, food, and some even have an emergency fund in case unplanned vacation opportunities or something else arises quickly.

Lincoln businesses have found a significance in teenager's money to their store's income.

"A lot of times I feel like local businesses take advantage of us. For instance, theater managers know we're not going to stop seeing movies, so they boost the admission fee really high," said sophomore Jane Peters.

"I think they should have a special rate for students since we don't have any big jobs yet," added another student. "What's fair in charging us the same price as they would to some rich person?"

Van Dorn Plaza attracts the lunchtime crowd of students because of the wide variety of fast food restaurants along 48th street.

"We go to McDonald's because it's cheap and close to school. Sometimes we go to Wendy's, Taco Inn, or the Little King just for variety," said junior Steve Cerveny.

Julie Grossbart sells clothes for Brooks in the Centrum. She said that "there really are a lot of teenagers buying their own clothes now. We don't get too many who spend over $50 or $60, but once in a while someone's mom comes in and really splurges on her daughter."

How and where to spend one's money can sometimes be a big hassle. A lot of times you can find the exact same item at two different stores each marked at very different prices.

"I think it's important to read advertisements so you can be sure that you're getting the best deal possible," said junior Cindi Pasco.

SURROUNDED BY SMALL shopping centers such as Rathbone Village, students had quick access to a variety of businesses to frequent. Leon's Food Mart was one such shop where students could stock up on munchies.

MONEY FOR GAS filled the tanks but emptied the wallets of many students. Senior Greg Litt gives his car the needed fuel.

SYNKRA KNIGHT member Lee Wendorff sells concessions at a basketball game. Clubs volunteer themselves for this service.

ALWAYS THERE to represent and support Southeast, the band enjoys a warm December-morning parade. McDonald's provided them with coupons for free food.

SENIOR DEB HOFFMAN takes advantage of Wendy's quick service during lunch. 48th Street provides many choices for fast food close to school.

Colophon

The 1,250 copies of the 1986 Shield yearbook were printed on 80 pound grade A enamel paper by Walsworth Publishing Company of Marceline, Mo. Copy was set by the yearbook staff through use of the Rosewriter, a typesetting program developed by Terry Rose, a former Lincoln East High student. The computer disc was played out in the graphics department at the Public School Administration Building. Sales representative was Mike Diffenderfer with Walsworth. The book sold for $20 to $22 each. The price included the 220 page book, a 24 page supplement, and the Clarion Classic, a creative arts magazine.

The 150 pt. board cover with embossed metal gloss seal and applied gold silkscreen lettering was designed and created by editors Shelly Altgilbers and Julia Sellmyer to reveal the theme of "Longer Days Make Better Knights".

Copy for the theme, divider, and closing pages was set in Souvenir type, with headlines in Park Avenue type. Copy in the Student Life and People sections was in Chelmsford type, and the Academic Section was set in Serif Gothic type. Copy in the Clubs and Organizations section was in Lubalin Graph type, and the Sports section was set in Avant Garde type.

The Mini-Mag was a different way to portray the lives of high school students. Results of a poll of about 200 students have determined the content of the Mini-Mag. The copy was set in Bauhaus type.

Layouts for the Student Life section were 3 column, with sports in 4 column, people in 2 column, clubs in 2 plus column, and academics in 7 columns. Mini-Mag consisted of a freestyle layout.

The 220-page book was completed in six segments, the first part of which included all of the color pages, and the cover. Those events which occurred after the March 14 deadline were covered in the spring supplement.

Four color processing was used on the first 16 pages of the book. Process yellow was used on the theme pages, 100 percent black on dividers and 20 percent gray endsheets. Caricatures in the Mini-Mag were created by senior Martha Lauber under the direction of the Shield staff.

The Shield is a member of the National Scholastic Press Association, has a first-class rating with the Columbia Press Association, and is a member of the Nebraska High School Press Association. The 1985 Shield received a Cornhusker award for the fifth consecutive year.

National/International Issues of 1985-'86

Though the students of Southeast were emerged in their own little world, many outside events affected their lives throughout the year. International, national, and local events all played a part in students' lives.

All of America came together in sadness on January 28 when the space shuttle Challenger exploded with seven people on board. Students around the nation were especially affected because of the link of having the first teacher in space on board the craft.

"I think that what happened was bad, but we should go on in the space program because in everything there's failures," said junior Keith Deckinger.

The year was also filled with other sad events. More than 40,000 people died in natural disasters alone throughout the world, it was the worst year in civil aviation, and world wide terrorism escalated.

Despite the many hi-jackings of planes and ships, and terrorist bombings, many people still traveled abroad.

"The threat of terrorism would not keep one from traveling abroad in the future because there are always dangers in traveling anywhere- if you really want to go you will take the risk," said senior Janie Sanders who traveled to Europe last summer with a People to People tour.

Two well-known people that died as a result of plane crashes were Samantha Smith, a 13 year old pen pal to former Soviet leader Yuri Andropov, and performer Ricky Nelson. The nation also mourned the losses of several movie stars such as Orson Welles, Yul Brynner, Rock Hudson, and close to home, the loss of Gordon MacRae was felt by many students. MacRae made his home in Lincoln and contributed much to the music world with his talents in movies such as "Oklahoma!"

It was also the year for Halley's Comet, a spectacle in the sky that makes its appearance once every 76 years. The comet was viewed by many people the world over, and was able to be seen on certain days even at Hyde Memorial Observatory at Holmes Park.

Physics teacher John Kastl took a special interest in Halley's Comet. He invited Professor Carrol Morre to give a lecture to physics classes. "He knows everything there is to know about Halley's Comet," said Kastl. "The comet comes once in lifetime which makes it unique."

While all the world was viewing Halley's Comet, eyes were also keeping a close watch on U.S. Soviet relations. In November, the leaders of the two countries, Reagan and Gorbachev, met for a series of meetings in Geneva, Switzerland. After the summit, feelings of renewed friendship and hope for a peaceful existence were felt throughout the country.

"The peace summit accomplished many things. Reagan and Gorbachev seem to be amiable towards each other," said sophomore Tim McAuliff. "The U.S. and Soviet Union don't seem to be as scared of each other as they used to be, and I feel that our relations are becoming quite strong."

There were many other events that touched the lives of students though they might not have been involved. The news was filled with stories of riots in South Africa, farm foreclosures, and bank closings. While national and international events sometimes seemed remote, students still found these events creeping into their lives be it the trivial consequences of a current events quiz in a social studies class or the momentous event of the Shuttle disaster which touched all our lives.

TERRORIST ACTIVITIES were on the rise, but despite the hi-jacking in Athens Greece, tourists weren't discouraged. People-to-people members Cathy Peters, Jill Blatt, Steph Feistner, Eric Johnson, Janie Sanders, and Allison Rohla manage to stay clear of hi-jackers at the Acropolis.

THE BENEFITS of a big city without all the crime problems of one, Lincoln, the capital, keeps getting better right along with the Knights.

CONSIDERING INFLATION'S adjusted dollars, the world's over production of oil drove the gasoline prices down to levels lower than several decades ago

A NATIONAL DECISION was made by President Ronald Reagan to raise all flags to only half-mast. This was part of a week long recognition of the deceased shuttle astronauts.

A THIRD LIGHT added to all new cars at the bottom of the rear window opened drivers' eyes as something new this year. The light is required on all new cars as an extra safety precaution

Longer Days Make Better

COMPLETE WITH A BALCONY, huge windows for plenty of light and much more convenient or necessary equipment, the art department boasts a fine facility.

FANS AT THE STATE Basketball Tournament kept their hands as high as the spirit level throughout most of the game. Waving goodbye to the losing team Omaha Marian, acknowledging free-throws with a "swoosh", pointing to the scoreboard while chanting and holding up a #1 finger, kept spectators involved.

THE BIGGEST DOWNTOWN PARADE ever called "The Star City Holiday Parade" began its annual roundup this year. Its success came mainly from the warm temperatures and over one hundred exhibits. Its purpose was to attract people all around downtown Lincoln before the winter holidays. Featured here is one of the Macy type balloons that were taller than many downtown buildings.

G.K. It's been a year, you are a great guy and I'm sure I will see you alot this summer. T.K.

The Best Are...

We may not leave until we've become the best. After all, the new ruling for longer days includes enough time to become better, and Southeast doesn't seem to produce anything less than the best. Obviously, the time spent in school wasn't always filled with success, dedication and achievement, but it's those hurdles that we must jump in order to become stronger.

One such hurdle was unexpected. It involved a nation's mourning together when on January 28 the space shuttle Challenger exploded killing all seven astronauts aboard, including teacher Christa McAuliffe. The tragedy which occurred at about 10:38 CST may have lengthened the day for some as teachers and students awaited the opportunity to leave school in order to receive more information. As one teacher put it, "Sometimes we feel so closed off and confined from the outside world."

Still, teachers coped, some by gathering up available televisions, and others by discussing the disaster with their classes.

Besides coping with the unexpected situations, students still had to tackle the perennial ones, like the "litter" problem. Open campus and the availability of junk food machines spread the matter from the hallways and classrooms into the neighbor-

On the inside, Southeast was constantly filled with people, neighbors who were irritated once again about the trash in their yards. Student Council discussed the problem at building advisory meetings and got more trash cans placed about the school and by "C" lot. With that, the situation did improve.

Parking also continued to be a problem, and places were a sought after commodity earlier in the day as students tried to get those required five classes per semester in and still make it to an after school job at a reasonable time.

"Tow Country" sometimes described Southeast's campus as the weather got cold and students parked illegally to avoid a long walk from "C" lot. Students who parked in the nearby church lot, at the end of a row in the main parking lot, or half on half off a sidewalk found themselves paying $40 to get their car back.

PRINCIPAL WESLEY LAUTERBACH congratulates Harry Hartshorn for his many years of service to Southeast before he retires. Architecture and mechanical Drafting instructor Robert Hall also retired mid year and was replaced by Southeast's first woman industrial arts teacher Jane Edwards.

PURE ENJOYMENT for the crowd and a welcome relief from the tense action at the Girls State semi-final basketball game against Lincoln High made the Shirettes a hit. This half-time performance was created in a short time and earned a standing ovation from the fans.

ENGULFED IN THE SHEER emotion of being the best, the Varsity Girls Basketball Team won Southeast's first state championship basketball game ever against number one ranked Marian. Despite a season with only two losses, hard work and some frustration throughout the season paid off for the Knights on the night of Saturday, March

 A relatively mild winter enabled students to get to school every day with little snow complications. It was the first year in a long time that students weren't granted with a snow day, at least up to this deadline anyway. Record setting temperatures, in the 50's and 60's, during winter break and in January lifted spirits and enticed joggers, bikers, children and P.E. classes to put on their shorts and enjoy the warm sun. Not only during the regular school week but on the weekends there were teachers' workshops, debate tournaments, solo and ensemble contests, play practice, athletic practice and games, and many other activities to enrich ambitions and help students achieve goals with a little extra work. This extra effort proved the "will" to be better by everyone.
 As a result of the hard work, the Knights seemed to always come out on the top in every area. Jim Hannah won national awards in humorous speaking, eight DECA students qualified for nationals, not one athletic team was rendered a failure, approximately 1/3 of all the students made it on Honor Roll and over a hundred seniors were recognized for their achievements by being selected for membership on the National Honor Society. The fine arts area boasted 1st place wins by the Countesses and Noblemen and the marching band placed 1st in 2 of its 3 competitions.

Of the 360 high schools in Nebraska, eight of them have the mascot name "Knights." We've successfully made it through the year of longer days which made our Knights better. We started out the year with a goal in mind. Hurdles were jumped, pain was overcome, we lost, won, failed, succeeded, cried, and laughed. And all of this was for a purpose. To be the best that we could be, and then to move on. That goal was reached. Everyone survived the longer days. And the Knights of 1986 were better for it.
 Now...we may be dismissed.

JUNIOR JON MILLS turns around to give one last salute to the Southeast Girls' State Champion Basketball team. But the celebration had only just begun since you can't ever take away the glory of being the best.

 Well getting to know you real soon quite a heated must say! But its better than I wish me like you from left! you are such a cool dude I want you you can't let me know what you think up Grant! take care - and call me 459 3570 I you really hope I'll be back & talk!!
 Love you - Tiffany!

I want, (Special R)

we were the peoples choice, they loved our funky sound! Our inner gear is not already that's kind of mess, but, we were the winners and we ran the show and you couldn't see us something that we didn't know! But you is gonna be the best, will dominate, in sports and will dominate the school (we'll subtract athletes like Mathewson)
I know I never tell you how much I appreciate all the things you do for me, but I really do appreciate it, you are the best friend ever! But I'll still take you downtown! This summer is going to be so fun, Coke-league and your baseball, we are going to have to do a little working though, letting and job wise!
High pay will come our way when they hear our game play! Oh, yeah, can you tell me how much a plane ticket to "rainbow town" costs? We might have to go there this summer! Clemson Johnson! Try to get on Kierston Rodriguez, she is the hottest person alive (ya know it!) But that's true that's why she never has no beef, so then she went to the sink and brushed her cold teeth! Sorry! Well, that's enough silliness, I'm gonna sign off now (and go eat one of your Pop-tarts), and oh, yeah Be Careful Cut There!!
Love Party!

Grant-you're still planning on going to Spain and you have always loved me! I try to control myself though I'll still talk to you.
 Take it easy
 I'll be home soon!

Grant, Spanish sucked,
 but you were cool.
 I hope we didn't give you an ulcer, oh well.
 You play football and
 I'll still talk to you.
 I'll still talk to you.
 Good luck in whatever you do and quit logging all the good looking girls.
 Take it easy
 I'll be home soon!
